

Contributors

Erik Albæk is Professor of Public Administration at Aalborg University, Denmark. His research has focused on agenda setting, evaluation, utilization of social science knowledge in public policy making, and the welfare state. His most recent book (with Lawrence Rose, Lars Strömberg and Krister Ståhlberg) is Nordic Local Government: Developmental Trends and Reform Activities in the Postwar Period (The Association of Finnish Local Authorities, 1996).

Marc Balaguer is a visiting fellow in the Sociology Department at Harvard University. Before this he worked for several years in the Social Welfare Department of the Catalan government, and in University Pompeu Fabra. He has published on poverty measures and equality and social policy.

Mark Bovens is Professor of Public Administration at the Utrecht School of Governance, Utrecht University of the Netherlands. His present research focuses on accountability and citizenship in the public sector, electronic governance, normative policy analysis and constitutional theory. His most recent book is The Quest for Responsibility: Accountability and Citizenship in Complex Organisations (Cambridge, University Press, 1998).

Viola Bureau is Lecturer in Comparative Public and Social Policy at Brunel University, UK. Her research interests lie in the comparative study of public policy, health politics in Europe, particularly the relationship between professions and the state, as well as methods of comparison. She has done research on health care reform and doctors, and the governance of nursing.

Andreas Busch is University Lecturer in German Politics at the University of Oxford. At the time of writing he was Assistant Professor in the Department of Political Science of Heidelberg University and John F. Kennedy Memorial Fellow (1997/8) at the Center for European Studies, Harvard University. His research interests are primarily in the fields of comparative politics and political economy. His most recent book (coedited with Dietmar Braun) is Public Policy and Political Ideas (Edward Elgar, 1999).

William D. Coleman is Professor of Political Science and Director of the Institute on Globalization and the Human Condition at McMaster University, Hamilton, Canada. Among his recent work is Regionalism and Global Economic Integration: Europe, Asia and the Americas (edited with Geoffrey Underhill; Routledge, 1998).

Geoffrey Dudley is a Research Fellow in the Centre for European Politics, Economics and Society at the University of Oxford. He is co-author (with Jeremy Richardson) of Why Does Policy Change? Lessons from British Transport Policy 1945–1999 (Routledge, 2001).

Leo A. van Eerden is an Assistant Professor in the Department of Finance and Financial Sector Management at Vrije Universiteit Amsterdam. His research focuses on the management of systemic risk and financial regulation.

Richard Freeman is Lecturer in European Policy and Politics at the University of Edinburgh. He has written a number of chapters and articles on the politics of HIV and AIDS and on prevention in health policy, and is the author of The Politics of Health in Europe (Manchester University Press, 2000).

Peter Garpenby is Senior Researcher at the Centre for Medical Technology Assessment, Linköping University, Sweden. His research is on the medical profession in Sweden, implementation of health care reform and the diffusion of medical technology, and has published on these topics in various academic journals.

Pablo González Alvarez is a doctoral student at CEACS/Institute Juan March and Nuffield College, Oxford University. His doctoral thesis focuses on the relations between federalism, the welfare state and inequality. Other research interests are the relations between social capital, political institutions and institutional performance as well as the links between social classes and electoral behaviour.

Mariska de Groot graduated in political science at Leiden University in 1998 and now works with the Dutch association of hospitals, where she is engaged in the development and implementation of a new system for financing hospitals and medical specialists.

Stephen Harrison is Professor of Social Policy at the University of Manchester, UK. He previously taught at the University of Leeds. His research interests encompass the politics of medicine and management, health services policy and organization, and public user involvement. He is the author (with C. Pollitt) of Controlling Health Professionals: The Future of Work and Organization in the National Health Service (Open University Press, 1994).

Paul 't Hart is Professor in Public Administration at Leiden University, the Netherlands, Research Director of the Leiden University Crisis Research Center and has published widely on public sector crisis management, policy evaluation and group dynamics in politics. A recent book (coedited with Pat Gray) is Public Policy Disasters in Europe (Routledge, 1998).

Jacint Jordana is Associate Professor in the Department of Political and Social Sciences at the University Pompeu Fabra, Barcelona, Spain. Among his research interests are industrial relations, public policy analysis and decentralization politics. Recent publications include 'Industrial Relations in Spain: Does Regional Diversity Awaken Union Tendencies to Divergence?', in J. Wets (ed.), Cultural Diversity in Trade Unions: A Challenge to Class Identity? (Ashgate, 2000).

Patrick Kenis is Professor of Organization and Policy Studies in the Faculty of Social and Behavioural Sciences, Tilburg University, the Netherlands. He has published articles on organizations, networks and public policy in different policy areas. He is coeditor (with Bernd Marin) of Managing AIDS: Organizational Responses in Six European Countries (Ashgate, 1997).

Michael Moran is Professor of Government at the University of Manchester, United Kingdom. He has published monographs on the regulation of industrial relations, financial markets and the medical profession. His most recent book is Governing the Health Care State: A Comparative Study of the United States, United Kingdom and Germany (Manchester University Press, 1999).

Mikel Navarro Arancegui is a Professor of Economics in the ESTE School of Management, University of Deusto (Spain). His research includes studies on industrial competitiveness and policy and the Spanish economy. He has published many books and articles on these subjects.

Sofía A. Pérez is Associate Professor of Political Science at Boston University. Her research interests centre on understanding institutional change in advanced industrialized economies, and her current research project focuses on the effect of financial and monetary integration and labour market institutions in Europe. She is the author of, among other publications, Banking on Privilege: The Politics of Spanish Financial Reform (Cornell University Press, 1997).

Luisa Perrotti is Assistant Professor of Political Science at Insead, Fontainebleau, France. Her research interests are in the areas of European integration and comparative politics and public policy. She has coedited (with V. Wright) Privatization and Public Policy (Edward Elgar, 2000).

B. Guy Peters is Maurice Falk Professor of Government at the University of Pittsburgh, USA and Senior Fellow of the Canadian Centre for Management Development. Among his recent publications are Institutional Theory in Political Science (Pinter, 1999) and European Policy Coordination: The National Dimension (Oxford University Press, 2000).

Jon Pierre is Professor of Political Science at the University of Gothenburg, Sweden, and an Adjunct Professor at the University of Pittsburgh, USA. His current research interests include governance, institutional analysis, public policy and public administration. His recent publications include Debating Governance (Oxford University Press, 2000) and (with B. Guy Peters) Governance, Politics and the State (Macmillan, 2000).

Jeremy Richardson is the Nuffield Professor of Comparative European Politics, Director of the Centre for European Politics, Economics and Society, and a Fellow of Nuffield College, Oxford. He is Editor of the Journal of European Public Policy and author of several books and articles on aspects of public policy.

Ana Rico works as a Research Fellow in the European Observatory on Health Care Systems (EOHCS). Prior to joining the Observatory she was Assistant Professor of Public Policy at the Pompeu Fabra in Barcelona. She has published in the field of health economics, health policy and political science.

Gabriel Saro Jauregui is Researcher at the Juan March Institute (Madrid). He specializes in industrial and finance policies and has published various articles and chapters on these topics.

Hans Schenk is Professor of Industrial Policy at Tilburg University and chairman of GRASP Research at Erasmus University Rotterdam, the Netherlands. His research interests include industrial policy, competition and regulation, mergers and acquisitions, behavioural and evolutionary theories of the firm, capital markets and banking. Among his recent publications is 'Industrial Policy Implications of Competition Policy Failure in Mergers', in K. Cowling (ed.), Industrial Policy in Europe (Routledge, 1999).

Monika Steffen is a Researcher at the Centre National de la Recherche Scientifique (CNRS) and is affiliated to Institute of Political Studies, University of Grenoble, France. Her work focuses on health policies and international comparisons in Europe, including the conditions in Eastern Europe. She is author of The Fight against AIDS. A Public Policy Comparison: France, Great Britain, Germany, Italy (Presses Universitaires de Grenoble, 1996).

Adam Tickell is Professor of Geography at the University of Bristol, and has previously worked at the universities of Leeds, Manchester, and Southampton. He has published widely on finance, governance and economic geography. He is currently completing a major research project on policy transfer in international finance.

Hannah Tooze completed her Ph.D. at the Centre for German Studies, University of Birmingham and now works in the private sector as a consultant to government.

Bent Sofus Tranøy is a doctor in political science at the University of Oslo, where he was a senior researcher at the National Research Project on Power and Democracy when his chapter was written. He has published on economic policy, environmental policy and the comparative method and has recently coedited (with Dag Harald Claes) a book on the Europeanization of Norwegian policy (Fagbokforl, 1999).

Margo Trappenburg is Associate Professor at the Utrecht School of Governance, Utrecht University, the Netherlands. Her recent interests include political philosophy, health care ethics and health care policy. A recent publication is 'Lifestyle Solidarity in the Health Care System', Health Care Analysis, 2000, 8 (1), 65–75.

Bert de Vroom is Associate Professor of Sociology of Public Policy, Faculty of Public Administration and Public Policy, University of Twente, the Netherlands. He has published widely on horizontal governance, AIDS policy, labour market and welfare policy. Among his recent publications is 'The Netherlands: The Strong Civil Society Response', (with Ineke Kester and Armand van Wolferen) in P. Kenis and B. Marin (eds), Managing Aids: Organizational Responses in Six European Countries (Ashgate, 1997).

David Wilsford is currently President of the Institute for American Universities in Aix-en-Provence, France. His research includes institutional theories of public policy and health policy. Among other works, he is the author of Doctors and the State: The Politics of Health Care in France and the United States (Duke University Press, 1991).

