This book is a culmination of our close to seven-year effort in tracing the development of high-tech industry in Taiwan. The idea was first conceived at the Judge Business School of the University of Cambridge where the authors first made encounters. The foundation of the book was laid at Ivey School of Business of the University of Western Ontario in Canada where Professor Paul Beamish introduced us to Edward Elgar Publishing.

Many people, too many to mention all of their names, have rendered their valuable help. Our co-authors have been most kind in being patient and relentlessly updating data and concepts. Our research assistants (Richard, Lena, Mary and Rhonda, among others) have devoted much effort in cross-validating data and 'coaching' us along. Our undergraduate, MBA, EMBA, PhD and masters students in Canada, Hong Kong and Taiwan have been constant sources of inspiration. We must confess to not being able to finish the manuscript without the support of our family members, friends and loved ones.

Last but not the least, we must also thank Hong Kong SAR Research Grant Council (CUHK 4311/01H) and Asia Pacific Institute of Business of the Chinese University of Hong Kong for providing us with grants to study this pollution intensive semiconductor industry. We are also particularly indebted to our institutions of affiliation, namely, Department of Management, Faculty of Business Administration of the Chinese University of Hong Kong and Department of Psychology, College of Science of the National University of Taiwan.
