

Contributors

Dominique Anxo is Co-director of the Centre of European Labour Market Studies and Associate Professor at the Department of Economics, University of Göteborg, Sweden. His research interests fall broadly into the area of labour market policy. He has previously co-edited Work Patterns and Capital Utilisation (Kluwer Academic Publishers, 1995) and is presently editing a book on 'The Job Creation Potential of the Service Sector in Europe'.

Marika Arents is a Labour Economist who works as a Researcher in the Division of Labour and Education at the Netherlands Economic Institute in Rotterdam. She has carried out several Dutch and international studies in the field of active labour market policies and social security.

Lars Behrenz is a Lecturer at Växjö University, Sweden. His main fields of research are evaluation of labour market policy, efficiency analysis and employers' recruitment behaviour.

Stéphane Carcillo is a Lecturer at the University of Paris 1 – Panthéon-Sorbonne and a Research Fellow at the MATISSE – SET. He is specialized in labour market macroeconomics and his current research interest is the role of institutional systems of job and worker flows.

María A. Davia is Lecturer in Economics at the University of Castilla-La Mancha. Her previous research, mainly at the University of Alcalá, Madrid, has been linked to European projects, especially the TRANSLAM project in the fields of human capital, transitions between different working-time schedules, and active labour market policies. Her current research is on youth insertion in the labour market in a European context. She has been a Visiting Fellow at the WZB (Social Science Research Centre, Berlin) and at the European Work and Employment Research Centre at the UMIST (University of Manchester Institute of Technology).

Lennart Delander is a Senior Lecturer at Växjö University, Sweden. His principal research interests are in methodological issues related to the evaluation of labour market policy.

Christine Erhel is an Assistant Professor in Economics at the University of Paris. She has specialized in comparative research on European labour market policies and macroeconomic evaluation.

Carlos García-Serrano has a Ph.D in Economics from the University of Alcalá, Madrid, Spain. He was Visiting Researcher in the Institute for Employment Research at the University of Warwick and in the ESRC Research Centre on Micro-Social Change (currently Institute for Social and Economic Research) at the University of Essex, UK, during 1995 and 1996. He is currently Senior Lecturer in the Department of Economic Analysis at the University of Alcalá. His field of research is labour economics, having published research works in national and international journals and books on issues related to unemployment benefits and duration, labour and job mobility, educational mismatch, and poverty and social exclusion.

Virginia Hernanz is a Lecturer at the University of Alcalá and a Researcher at the FEDEA (Fundación de Estudios de Economía Aplicada). She has participated in different national and international research projects on transitions in the labour market, human capital, employment policies, and the youth labour market. She is currently working on segmentation in the Spanish labour market and the links between temporary jobs and segmentation. She has been a Visiting Fellow in the European Work and Employment Research Centre at the UMIST (University of Manchester Institute of Technology) and at the WZB.

Christoph Hilbert is a Research Fellow in the Labour Market and Employment Research Unit at the WZB. He is an economist and a graduate of the Humboldt University, Berlin. His research interests are in labour economics, especially labour market policy, training and compensation issues.

Jaap de Koning is Professor of Labour Market Policy at the Erasmus University, Rotterdam. He is also a Director at the Social Economic Research Institute (SEOR) at the same university. He was previously Director of the Labour and Education Division, and member of the management team of the Netherlands Economic Institute. He has been active in the field of evaluation of labour market policy for more than 10 years. He has also done extensive research in the closely related field of the economics of training.

Miguel A. Malo is Professor of Economics in the Department of Economics and Economic History at the University of Salamanca, Spain where he teaches macroeconomics and economic modelling. His main research interests are in redundancies and the determinants of severance pay, employment policies, gross labour market flows, educational mismatch, and the economic analysis of social exclusion. He has published a number of books and articles in specialized journals.

Hugh Mosley is a Senior Research Fellow in the Labour Market and Employment Research Unit at the WZB. He is a political scientist specializing in comparative research on labour market policies. His research has focused on implementation, working-time issues and labour market regulation.

Harald Niklasson is an Associate Professor at Växjö University, Sweden. He specializes in methods of labour market policy evaluation and has written about management by objectives in labour market policies.

Günther Schmid is Director of the Research Unit on Labour Market Policy and Employment at the WZB. He is also Professor of Political Economics at the Free University of Berlin. His main research is on equity and efficiency in labour market policy.

Holger Schütz is a Research Fellow at the WZB. His research areas include the modernization of public employment services, implementation and evaluation of active labour market policies, and benchmarking of labour market performance and policies.

Els Sol is Research Associate of the Hugo Sinzheimer Institute for Labour Law and Social Security, Faculty of Law, University of Amsterdam, the Netherlands.

Stefan Speckesser graduated in 1996 in Political Science from the Berlin Free University. After participating in the TRANSLAM project as a Research Fellow at the WZB, he now works as a teaching assistant in the Faculty of Economics at Mannheim University, Germany. He is currently writing his doctoral dissertation on microeconomic evaluation of labour market policy in Germany based on observational data.

Luis Toharia Cortés is Professor of Economics at the University of Alcalá, Spain. He has published on various aspects of the labour market in Spain, including the measurement of employment and unemployment, the causes and consequences of unemployment, the nature of employment growth and the rise of fixed-term and part-time employment, the cost of dismissals, the unemployment benefit system, and active labour market policies. He recently directed a study on the Spanish labour market for the European Commission (1997) and has acted on several occasions as expert and consultant for the Spanish government as well as for the European Commission.

Martijn van Velzen is a Labour Sociologist and a Researcher in the Hugo Sinzheimer Institute at the University of Amsterdam. He has written on industrial relations, particularly for the European Industrial Relations Observatory. As a visiting scholar in the Institute of Industrial Relations at the University of California at Berkeley, van Velzen is currently writing a dissertation on the regulation of training for temporary workers in the Netherlands and in the United States.