

Contents

---

List of figures	vii
List of tables	viii
Acknowledgements	ix

Introduction	1
D. Hugh Whittaker

PART I TECHNOLOGY-DRIVEN SOCIAL EVOLUTION

1 Society and the individual	35
2 On the possibility and desirability of a theory of modernization	50
3 Land reform and Japan's economic development: a reactionary thesis	57
4 Modern co-operatives in traditional communities	67
5 Education and jobs: stages of development	76
6 Unions in a technologically mature society	86
7 Philosophies of history	95
8 A note about technological determinism	109

PART II AND LATE DEVELOPMENT

9 The modernizer as a special case: Japanese factory legislation, 1882–1911	113
10 Late development	128
11 The late-development effect in schooling and education	139
12 Technological self-reliance: sturdy ideal or self-serving rhetoric?	149
13 Shinohata: epilogue	160

PART III BUT CULTURE DOES MATTER, TOO

14 Individualism: its growth and future	167
15 Authority, hierarchy and community	179

16	Industrial relations in Japan and elsewhere	186
17	The importance of educational traditions: Japan and elsewhere	194
18	Confucianism, economic growth and social development	202
19	In what ways a Japanese 'system'?	213
20	Unity and diversity in world culture	217

PART IV POLEMICS: FOR ALL THE CONSTRAINTS OF STRUCTURE AND CULTURE, IS THERE STILL ROOM FOR HOPE AND REASON?

21	White papers	235
22	The diploma disease: some modest proposals	236
23	Adjustment in process: a Lancashire town	244
24	Unemployment, jobs and sharing	247
25	The firm as community: the road to industrial democracy	265
26	Rethinking free trade	275
27	Convergence in whose interest?	278
28	Why bother about our grandchildren?	284

	List of Ronald Dore's publications	287
	Index	309