

Acknowledgements

First of all I would like to thank Ronald Dore for his co-operation, assistance and good humour throughout the preparation of this book. His willingness to go the extra mile made a big difference to the outcome. I would like to thank Joanne Bennett-Murray and Zöe Conway Morris for their help in scanning the articles and putting them into a format ready for abridging, and the Japan Foundation (London office) for a grant to make this possible. Takeshi Inagami provided valuable comments on a number of occasions, and Geoffrey Hawthorn and Richard Bowring gave helpful feedback on an earlier draft of the Introduction. Makoto Fujimoto tracked down a number of articles and helped to fill gaps in the list of Japanese publications. Finally, Edward Elgar's enthusiasm, stemming in part from his long association with publishing Ronald Dore's work, helped to see this project through to completion.
