

Acknowledgements

The range and quality of the papers included in this book give some indication not only of the importance of this field, but also the vigour with which economists, geographers and other professionals are contributing to the development of knowledge of services' role in the global economy. So, our first acknowledgement must go to the chapter authors. Most of those attending the Alcalá Congress have partially or completely rewritten their papers, whilst others have been commissioned to write specially for this collection. All the papers have been reviewed and the authors have accepted the comments and suggestions made by the reviewers. Julian Arkell deserves special thanks as he was instrumental in completing Part III and in persuading some very busy members of the policy community to contribute to an academic book.

We would also like to thank the participants of the RESER Conference held in Alcalá as many made important and interesting comments on the papers. We also need to thank the institutions and companies (particularly the University of Alcalá, the Chamber of Commerce and Industry of Madrid, UniCaja and Telefónica) that provided financial and logistic support for the Congress.

In a book that brings together academics based in seven countries and working through four languages we must thank the translators who have tried to revise the papers written by non-English authors to ensure that the original meaning is retained. In particular, we want to thank P.A. Lowe, who undertook a final revision of the manuscript under John Bryson's direction.

Finally, the publishers wish to thank Kluwer Law International for their kind permission to reprint 'Developing countries and the GATs 2000 round', Pierre Sauvé, Journal of World Trade, 34 (2), 2000, 85–92.

Juan R. Cuadrado-Roura, Luis Rubalcaba-Bermejo and John Bryson
April 2001