Acknowledgements

A number of people have supported us in the process of writing this book. We would like to thank Dr Hingel, Nicole Dewandre and Fadila Boughanemi at DGXII of the European Commission. The research was funded under the Fourth Framework of the Target Socio-Economic Research Programme (TSER) (Contract number SOE2-CT95-3007, Project Number: CT 953007 (PL 953442) (SC). We are extremely grateful to Christoph Albrecht, Hannelore Minzlaff, Sandra Gauss and Karin Reinsch at the WZB who have provided excellent administrative support, as always, for the financial management and coordination of the project over the years. Dr Marco Doujdeins at the OECD in Paris, Professor Jill Rubery, UMIST Manchester, Professor Inmaculada Cebrián from the University of Alcalá, Madrid and Professor Colin Crouch from the European University Institute in Florence were wonderful hosts for our research meetings at different stages of the project. Thanks also go to Andy Wilson for work on improving our English. Our publisher Edward Elgar and his team have provided continued support and interest in publishing our research, for which we are very grateful.

We would also like to thank Professor Günther Schmid, both for his intellectual inspiration that provided the catalyst for the many debates coming out of this project and also for his humanist dedication in attempting to search out new ways to deal with old and difficult problems. In many ways, we as authors and researchers have benefited immensely from this period of collaboration and exchange, and we hope that some of these benefits will be passed on to our readers.

Finally, my personal thanks go to Rik Oisín, who contributed to delaying this project, to Tom Tigernach for making sure it would be finished before he arrived, and most of all to Hendrik Maaß for creating the time and space between them to allow me to get this book finished.

Jacqueline O’Reilly, Berlin