Colin Robinson has been at the forefront of energy economics thinking for over 30 years and it is a pleasure and a privilege to edit this festschrift in his honour. Colin has made an outstanding contribution across the whole spectrum of energy economics; he is an inspiration to energy economists everywhere, not least me. At a time when academic economics moves ever further from its application to important policy issues, it is appropriate that this volume honours Colin; a man who has influenced the thinking of academics, researchers and policy makers alike. I sincerely thank him personally and also on behalf of the Surrey Energy Economics Centre (SEEC) at the University of Surrey.

The collection of papers in this volume originates from a SEEC conference held in the summer of 2000 to honour Colin. I am very grateful to Charlie Lye who originally set up the conference and to Katie Lowe who coordinated the event. They both undertook their tasks in a friendly and efficient way and I am for ever in their debt for the assistance they gave me. I am also indebted to Sally Rumsey for helping me to chase up a number of references at very short notice and to Diana Corbin for her invaluable assistance in putting this volume together.

I would also like to thank my wife Sue and our daughters Sam, Charlotte and Harriet for their support; they are the backbone of my existence. Their love maintains my sanity while I am working in the increasingly stressful and pressurized environment of a British university.
