Acknowledgments

This book is the crystallization of a collective undertaking that started in July 2000 as a subtheme in the Helsinki colloquium of the European Group for Organization Studies (EGOS). Each adventure has its beginnings and we would like to acknowledge the role of Kari Lilja, who was instrumental in bringing us together. Kari had suggested that the two of us should jointly run a subtheme at EGOS. In retrospect this was a good match indeed and our collaboration has been both extremely fruitful and pleasant.

A second meeting followed in the fall in Lisbon, Portugal. This second meeting took place within the framework of the European Summer Research Institute (ESRI). ESRI was a three year program (1999–2001) funded by the European Science Fundation (ESF), the Copenhagen Business School, the Danish Research Academy and the Danish Social Science Research Council. It sponsored regular research workshops and also involved the yearly running of a PhD Summer School on Comparative Economic Sociology. We thank the Steering and Scientific Committees of ESRI for giving us the opportunity to bring contributors together a second time. This has been critical, we found, and the Lisbon workshop has allowed us to move towards a tightly-knit volume. We would like to extend our special appreciation to Marianne Risberg and Peer Hull Kristensen for taking on the heavy load of organizing the logistics for that workshop. The Lisbon workshop was a highly stimulating intellectual event and we are grateful to all participants for making it so.

All along in our job as editors, we have been aided by a great group of contributors. They have patiently dealt with long and repeated sets of detailed comments that we sent them. They agreed to follow the ‘rules of the game’ as we had defined them – work towards and craft a tightly-knit and homogeneous volume.

Work for this book would never have been possible without the support of a number of institutions. We have already mentioned ESRI, the European Science Foundation and the Copenhagen Business School. We would also like to acknowledge the support we received from our own institutions – ESSEC and the WZB – in the form both of time and resources. Our appreciation extends to the Sociology Department at Stanford University where one of the editors spent a six month sabbatical and found a highly congenial environment to work on this book. The list would be too long but behind all chapters to this volume there are one or several institutions that, directly or indirectly, contributed important resources.

Ultimately, however, in intellectual endeavours of this sort the greatest debts are to individuals. Along the way, we were helped by a number of scholars and colleagues who provided us with advice, reacted and commented on parts of the manuscript, shared their own work, engaged with us in discussions apparently unrelated yet still highly useful, or were supportive in any other way. Our special appreciation goes to John Meyer. We would also like to thank, in alphabetical order, Jose Luis Alvarez, Rolv Peter Amdam, Jennifer Bair, Nils Brunsson, Haldor Byrkjeflot, Steven Casper, Anita Engels, Lars Engwall, Neil Fligstein, Marion Fourcade-Gourinchas, Michal Frenkel, Henrik Glimstedt, Michel Goyer, Mark Granovetter, Peer Hull Kristensen, Georg Kruecken, Christel Lane, Arie Lewin, Ray Loveridge, Peter Mendel, Glenn Morgan, Dieter Plehwe, Woody Powell, Kerstin Sahlin-Andersson, Ayse Saka, Diana Sharpe, Arndt Sorge and Richard Whitley. We also acknowledge the collective input of research seminars where parts of the manuscript were presented – the Globalization Seminar at Stanford University, the Doctoral Seminar at HEC in Paris, and the Organization and Employment Research Seminar at the WZB in Berlin.

At Edward Elgar, we benefited from the professionalism of Francine O’Sullivan and Bob Pickens, who were of great help through all stages. We also appreciated the support of Geoffrey Hodgson, Editor of the series ‘New Horizons in Institutional and Evolutionary Economics’.

Finally, we dedicate this book to our daughters, Alma, Milena and Nepheli, thanking them for being patient and for ‘sharing’ us with this book, which none of them will be able to read for quite a number of years still!
