This book is a product of the research project ‘The interaction of global and local governance: implications for industrial upgrading’. The project was a joint initiative of the Institute of Development Studies (IDS) at the University of Sussex and of the Institute for Development and Peace (INEF) at the University of Duisburg. It involved contributors from many parts of the world. In the name of all collaborators I wish to thank the Volkswagen Foundation for funding this project. Complementary funding was received from other organizations, acknowledged in the chapters where this applies.

I enjoyed coordinating this project and thank my collaborators for the enthusiasm and energy they invested in this project. Even though we had a great research team, progress was at times difficult. In the research business, the proverbial ‘no pain – no gain’ remains unfortunately true, especially when it comes to distilling the key findings and bringing out the value added. My deepest thanks go to all contributors for providing the nth revision of their chapters.

There are three colleagues to whom I am particularly indebted. Dirk Messner, Director of INEF, shared with me the intellectual and practical coordination of the project. John Humphrey, my close collaborator for many years, helped to find a way out of several awkward corners (financial and analytical) and played a key role in developing the conceptual framework. Simone Field helped to edit all the chapters and made sure that the book is accessible and can be enjoyed by all readers irrespective of their disciplinary background.
