

Acknowledgments

Marsha Lasker Nell took on the chief responsibility for organizing and running the conference and for obtaining the manuscripts. She did a fine job. Louis-Philippe Rochon also helped ensure a well-run conference. Ray Majewski organized the contributions from the Program on Transformational Growth and Full Employment. Natalia Filippova ably assisted in difficult editorial responsibilities and helped Luca Fiorito research the New School heritage in social economics. Pavlina Tcherneva and Fadhel Kaboub provided first-rate editorial assistance in the final stages of the project. Janet Cavallero performed excellent editorial work and handled the complex job of pulling the final manuscript together with grace and efficiency.

We are particularly grateful to Richard Musgrave and James Duesenberry for attending and participating. We note with sorrow that the conference was the last occasion of academic participation for both Robert Eisner and Lynn Turgeon. They both will be sorely missed.

Finally, we thank the Graduate Faculty of Political and Social Science of the New School for Social Research, now New School University, which has served as the intellectual base for many of the participants, as well as being the home of the originator of functional finance, Abba Lerner. We also thank the Center for Full Employment and Price Stability, at the University of Missouri–Kansas City, for providing generous resources and support, which also enables the Program on Transformational Growth and Full Employment at the New School’s Graduate Faculty to continue its important work on real-world macroeconomics.
