Contributors

Damien Geradin is a professor of Law at the University of Liège and at the College of Europe, Bruges. He has also held visiting appointments at a number of universities, including King’s College London, the University of Paris II (Panthéon-Assas), the University of Peking, Columbia Law School, Harvard Law School, UCLA School of Law, and Yale Law School. His works focuses on competition law and the regulation of network industries.

Fabrizio Gilardi is a researcher at the Institute of Political and International Studies of the University of Lausanne, Switzerland. He wrote his PhD dissertation on delegation to independent regulatory agencies in Western Europe, and has published in the Journal of European Public Policy, the Swiss Political Science Review, and Politische Vierteljahresschrift. He currently works on the diffusion of regulatory reforms in various fields.

Nicolas Jabko received a PhD from the University of California at Berkeley, and teaches political science at Sciences Po, Paris. He has published articles in the Journal of European Public Policy, Comparative Political Studies, Revue Française de Science Politique and Security Studies. His current research projects are on European political economy and transatlantic relations.

Jacint Jordana is Associate Professor in the Department of Political and Social Sciences at the Universitat Pompeu Fabra (Barcelona). His research interest focuses on the analysis of collective action, regulatory public policy and Latin American governance. He has recently edited the volume Governing Telecommunications and the New Information Society in Europe (Edward Elgar, 2002).

Christoph Knill is Professor of Political Science at the University of Konstanz, where he holds the chair on Comparative Public Policy and Administration. His particular research interests include comparative public policy, public administration and European governance. He is author of The Europeanization of National Administrations. Patterns of Institutional Change and Persistence (Cambridge University Press, 2001).

David Levi-Faur is a senior lecturer at the Department of Political Science, University of Haifa (leave and sabbatical, 2000–2004) and a senior fellow of the Regulation Network, RSSS, at the Australian National University. His major fields of interest are comparative political economy and comparative public policy. He currently specializes in multi-level analysis of the origin and diffusion of regulatory reforms. He was visiting scholar and research associate at the London School of Economics, the University of California, Berkeley, the University of Amsterdam, the University of Utrecht, the University of Manchester and the University of Oxford. His papers have been published in leading journals in the relevant fields (such as the Journal of Public Policy, the Journal of European Public Policy, Review of International Relations, Studies in Comparative International Development, the Journal of Socio-Economics, the European Journal of Political Research and Comparative Political Studies).

Andrea Lenschow received a PhD in Political Science from New York University (1996), and has been Assistant Professor of Political Science at Salzburg University from 1997 to 2003. As of October 2003 she will be Junior Professor at the University of Osnabrueck. In her research she has focused in particular on theories of institutionalism and implementation research in the field of environmental policy in Western Europe. She as edited the volume Environmental Policy Integration. Greening Sectoral Policies in Europe (Earthscan, 2002) and co-edited with Christoph Knill the book Implementing EU Environmental Policy: New Directions and Old Problems (Manchester University Press, 2000). Currently she is participating in an EU-funded project on Environmental Policy Convergence in Europe.

Martin Lodge is Lecturer in Political Science and Public Policy at the Department of Government and the ESRC Centre for Analysis of Risk and Regulation at the London School of Economics and Political Science. His research interests include the comparative study of regulation, especially network regulation, as well as comparative public administration and policy. His publications include On Different Tracks: Designing Railway Regulation in Britain and Germany (Praeger, 2003).

Joseph A. McCahery is Professor of International Business Law at Tilburg University Faculty of Law and a research fellow at the Tilburg Institute of Law and Economics and the European Corporate Governance Institute (Brussels). He holds a visiting appointment at Leiden University Faculty of Law. Previously, he held an appointment at Warwick University, where he also received his PhD degree. He was a law clerk for Judge Nathaniel R. Jones of the United States Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit. He has written widely on corporate law, corporate finance, the political economy of federalism, and securities regulation.

Iain McLean is Professor of Politics, Oxford University and a fellow of Nuffield College. He has worked on case studies of railway and mine

Anthony Ogus is Professor of Law, and Research Fellow at the Centre for Regulation and Competition, in the University of Manchester. His main research interest is in law-and-economics and its application to regulation. He has written Regulation: Legal Form and Economic Theory (Oxford University Press, 1994). He is currently studying regulation in developing countries.

David Sancho is a lecturer at the Political and Social Sciences Department of University Pompeu Fabra (UPF) and at present holds the position of Vice Dean of Management and Public Administration Studies at this university. His various research fields are centred on the study of public policies and governmental intervention: regulation, telecommunication policy, promotion of the information society and modernization strategies of public management through the use of the new information and communication technologies.

Patrick Schmidt is an assistant professor of Political Science at Southern Methodist University, Dallas, Texas. Before this he was the John Adams Research Fellow at the Centre for Socio-Legal Studies and a research fellow of Nuffield College, Oxford. Publications include: Lawyers and Regulation: The Politics of the Administrative Process (forthcoming, Cambridge University Press). His current fieldwork focuses on the involvement of lawyers in the regulation of global financial markets.

Volker Schneider is Professor of Political Science at Konstanz University, where he holds the Chair on Empirical Theory of the State. His research interests are state theory, organized interests, evolution of political institutions and policy networks. He has recently published: Private Organizations in Global Politics (with Karsten Ronit) (Routledge, 2000), and ‘Institutional Reform in Telecommunications: The European Union in Transnational Policy Diffusion’ (in Maria Green Cowles et al., Transforming Europe, Cornell University Press, 2001).

Colin Scott is Reader in Law in the Centre for the Analysis for Risk and Regulation at the London School of Economics. Key publications include the co-authored studies Telecommunications Regulation: Culture, Chaos and Interdependence Inside the Regulatory Process (Routledge, 2000) and Regulation Inside Government (Oxford University Press, 1999).

Marc Tenbücken has studied Politics and Management at the Universities of Constance and Geneva, and at MIT. Currently he is working as an academic assistant and preparing his PhD thesis. His research interest are policy processes in the European Union and regulatory reform in infrastructure sectors. He has recently published Corporate Lobbying in the European Union (Peter Lang, 2002).