Foreword

We thank the University of Washington Department of Economics for sponsoring 'Frontiers in Natural Resource and Environmental Economics', a conference in honor of Gardner M. Brown, Jr., that led to this book. In particular, we thank Richard Parks for his efforts in planning a wonderful event and helping to lay the foundation for this book; Neil Bruce, who supported and encouraged us to plan a conference worthy of Gardner's career; and Gary Waterman who helped to make the event, and in turn this book, a reality. Gardner Brown has contributed to his department, university, and profession in every way possible – as a leader, scholar, teacher, mentor, and friend. We know that we speak for his many colleagues, and the authors of these chapters, when we thank him for the opportunity to share his passion for environmental and natural resource economics.
