As with all books, this one owes its transition from an identified to an exploited opportunity to a number of people. A pilot study relating to the habitual entrepreneur phenomenon was pursued in collaboration with Frank Martin (University of Stirling) who conducted several in-depth interviews with novice, serial and portfolio entrepreneurs. Frank's bridging role with the support network is appreciated. The insightful support of Brian McVey and Scottish Enterprise is warmly acknowledged. We are also grateful for the financial sponsorship from the Institute of Enterprise and Innovation at Nottingham University Business School that enabled additional interviews to be conducted in England and Wales. A number of colleagues provided helpful comments during the development of the research and suggestions on earlier versions of the study, notably David Storey, Colin Mason and Richard Harrison, Andy Lockett, Dave Paton, Sue Birley, Per Davidsson, Dean Shepherd, Lowell Busenitz, Jim Fiet, Rita McGrath, Lars Kolvereid, Jerome Katz, Peter Rosa, Johan Wiklund and Shaker Zahra, as well as participants at the Global Entrepreneurship Conference, Babson Entrepreneurship Conference, the Academy of Management Conferences and various seminars and workshops, provided helpful insights on earlier versions of some of the material presented here. Most importantly, we thank the respondents to the study who took time out from running their businesses to complete our questionnaire; we hope they will find some useful insights. Thanks also to Francine O'Sullivan and Jo Betteridge of Edward Elgar for their encouragement and forbearance.

On a personal note, Deniz Ucbasaran would like to thank her husband for his involvement in football, which allowed her to write the book in peace, but more importantly for his endless patience, support and encouragement. She would also like to thank her family for their love and for providing her with opportunities and invaluable guidance in life. She would like to thank her father in particular for her Goethean upbringing: 'Treat people as if they were what they ought to be and you will help them become what they are capable of being'. Paul Westhead warmly thanks Sue Birley with whom some of his initial work on habitual entrepreneurs was conducted. He would also like to thank Benjamin and Tracy for allowing him to pursue his serial/portfolio academic career away from home. Mike Wright thanks Barclays Private Equity and Deloitte for sponsorship of the Centre for Management Buy-out Research and for insights into the financing of serial entrepreneurs that originally helped to identify this research opportunity. He would also like to thank AF and BD, two of the greatest serial entrepreneurs, for their inspiration.
