Acknowledgements

The editors wish to thank all of those – family, friends, and colleagues – who made this scholarly venture possible. First, we want to express our special appreciation to our friend and mentor James MacGregor Burns for initially challenging us to take up the task of creating a general theory of leadership. We hope this book justifies his faith in the project.

A special note of appreciation must be extended to the three institutions that initially supported our efforts, namely, the Program in Leadership Studies at Williams College, the James MacGregor Burns Academy of Leadership at the University of Maryland, and the Jepson School of Leadership Studies at the University of Richmond, Virginia. Kenneth Ruscio, Dean of the Jepson School, has been particularly helpful and supportive, and we are grateful.

We wish to thank the scholars who pushed us onward in our journey – chapter authors as well as others who weighed in from time to time, namely, Bruce Avolio, Zachary Green, John L. Johnson, Jean Lipman-Blumen, Deborah Meehan, Ronald Walters, and Gary Yukl.

Deborah Meehan of the Leadership Learning Community provided an early grant to support the initial phases of our efforts. This support, in conjunction with that of Shelly Wilsey, allowed several lively sessions focused on our project at the International Leadership Association meetings in 2002, 2003, and 2004. Support from Williams College allowed us to use the beautiful facilities at Mount Hope in Williamstown, Massachusetts for our extended planning retreat in 2002. Lisa Carey Moore worked tirelessly with great skill and diplomacy on all retreat arrangements. We wish to thank Michael Cassin and the Clark Art Institute for an after-hours tour of the Clark’s superb collection, an experience that enlivened considerably our creative thinking during our retreat.

We want to thank Joanne Ciulla for encouraging us to publish this volume in her series on New Horizons in Leadership Studies. Her support for the project, and her own contributions to it, are greatly appreciated. Cassie King helped edit several of the book’s chapters and we are deeply grateful for her talented assistance. We want also to thank Alan Sturmer at Edward Elgar for his encouragement, patience, and wise counsel.

Nothing would be possible without the support of our families. To Marion Goethals, Olive Sorenson Jones, and Suzanna Strasburg we owe more than can be said simply here. Thank you.