Contributors

Randy Albeda is Professor of Economics and Senior Research Fellow at the Center for Social Policy at University of Massachusetts Boston, USA. Her focus is a broad range of economic policies affecting low-income families. Her coauthored books include Glass Ceilings and Bottomless Pits: Women’s Work, Women’s Poverty, Unlevel Playing Fields: Understanding Wage Inequality and Discrimination, and The War on the Poor: A Defense Manual. She is an Associate Editor of the award-winning journal, Feminist Economics.

Nina Banks is Associate Professor of Economics at Bucknell University, USA. She received her PhD in economics from the University of Massachusetts Amherst. She is preparing an edited volume of the speeches and writings of Sadie Alexander, the US’s first black woman economist, which focuses on economic and political justice. Professor Banks’ research also analyzes the effects of racial and gendered ideologies on African American migrants in Pittsburgh during the World War I Great Migration era. She is published in a number of journals, including the Review of Black Political Economics, Feminist Economics, and the Review of Social Economy.

Drucilla K. Barker is Professor in the Department of Anthropology and Director of Women’s & Gender Studies at the University of South Carolina, USA. Her research interests are gender and globalization, feminist political economy, and feminist methodology. Her work ranges from explorations of the gendered nature of economic efficiency to poststructuralist and interdisciplinary explorations of social science methodologies. She is a founding member of the International Association for Feminist Economics and was the founding director of the Gender and Women’s Studies Program at Hollins University. Her books include Liberating Economics, Toward a Feminist Philosophy of Economics, and Feminist Economics and the World Bank.

Suzanne Bergeron is Professor of Social Sciences and Women’s Studies and Director of Women’s and Gender Studies at the University of Michigan-Dearborn, USA, where she teaches courses on development economics, feminist theory, and gender and development. Her work on the implications of recent economic innovations for gender and development policy has been published in the International Feminist Journal of Politics, Globalizations, the edited volume Development, Sexual Rights and Global Governance, and elsewhere. Her authored book is Fragments of Development: Nation, Gender, and the Space of Modernity (University of Michigan Press, 2005).

Heather Boushey is Senior Economist at the Center for American Progress. She co-edited The Shriver Report: A Woman’s Nation Changes Everything (Simon & Schuster ebook, 2009). Her research has been published in academic journals and has been covered widely in the media, including regular appearances on the PBS Newshour and in The New York Times, where she was called one of the ‘most vibrant voices in the field’ Boushey received her PhD in economics from the New School for Social Research and her BA from Hampshire College.
Elissa Braunstein is Associate Professor in the Department of Economics at Colorado State University in Fort Collins, USA, and an Associate Editor for the journal Feminist Economics. She works primarily on issues related to gender and macroeconomics, with particular emphasis on international and development dynamics. In addition to gender and central bank policy, Professor Braunstein’s recent work considers how to account for patriarchal institutions in econometric growth models as well as how to incorporate care in structuralist macroeconomic models.

S. Charusheela is Associate Professor of Interdisciplinary Arts and Sciences at the University of Washington, Bothell, USA. Her work straddles the intersection of post-colonial theory, Marxism, and feminism. She currently serves as Editor of Rethinking Marxism. Recent publications include ‘Gender and the stability of consumption: a feminist contribution to Post Keynesian economics’ (Cambridge Journal of Economics, 2010) and ‘Response: history, historiography, and subjectivity’ (Rethinking Marxism, 2011).

Zohreh Emami is Professor of Economics and former Associate Dean and Vice President for Academic Affairs at Alverno College, USA. She teaches courses in international and development economics, globalization and democracy, women and the economy, women and leadership, and the economic environment. She consults with colleges and universities on teaching, learning, assessment, and curriculum design and writes on economics, education, and democracy. Her book with Paulette Olson entitled Engendering Economics: Conversations with Women Economists in the United States was published in April 2002.

Deborah M. Figart is Professor of Education and Economics at The Richard Stockton College of New Jersey, USA. She is one of the 50 founding members of the International Association for Feminist Economics (IAFFE) and served as President of the Association for Social Economics in 2006–07. She is an internationally known scholar in the field of labor and employment issues, writing on subjects such as pay equity and wage discrimination, labor–management relations, working time, emotional labor at work, minimum and living wage issues, job evaluation, and career ladders. She is currently co-editor of the Review of Social Economy and has served on the editorial board of numerous professional journals.

Amie Gaye is an expert in international development statistics who has worked for the past six years as a Policy Specialist for the UNDP Human Development Report (HDRO), where she contributed to the conception of the Report’s recently introduced Gender Inequality Index. Before joining HDRO, Gaye worked at the UNDP Office in Namibia as a Technical Advisor for three years, supporting the National Poverty Reduction and Equity Programme. She also worked at the Gambia Bureau of Statistics for 20 years, holding various positions including as head of its Gender Statistics Unit. She holds an undergraduate degree in statistics from the University of Ghana and a Master’s degree in Population Research from the University of Exeter, UK.

Julie Ham is a doctoral student in criminology at Monash University, Australia, and an associate of the Global Alliance Against Traffic in Women (GAATW). Her research explores how the criminalization and regulation of sex work and migration influences migrant sex workers’ security, mobility, and agency. She has published on anti-trafficking, participatory action research, and activist efforts by trafficking survivors, sex workers, and domestic workers. Her work includes community-based research with sex workers, immigrant communities, women substance users, low-income urban communities, and anti-violence organizations.

Cilja Harders has been director of the Center for North African and Middle Eastern Studies at the Otto-Suhr Institute for Political Sciences at Freie Universität Berlin, Germany, since 2007. She received her PhD in political sciences from the University of Hamburg, Germany. She has extensive research experience in the Middle East (Egypt, Jordan, Syria, Lebanon, the Gulf, and Morocco). Her research focuses on Middle Eastern politics and politics ‘from below’, foreign policy and Arab–European relations, and gender and violence. She coedited Beyond Regionalism? Regional Cooperation, Regionalism and Regionalisation in the Middle East (Ashgate, 2008).

Ariane Hegewisch is a Study Director at the Institute for Women’s Policy Research, a thinktank based in Washington, DC, USA. Her research concerns workplace discrimination, work–life reconciliation and job quality. Prior to coming to the United States in 2001, she researched and taught comparative European human resource management at Cranfield School of Management, UK. After receiving a BSc in economics from the London School of Economics and an MPhil in development studies from the IDS, Sussex, she began her career in local government in the UK as a policy advisor on local economic development.

Elizabeth Hirsh is Associate Professor of Sociology and Canada Research Chair in Social Inequality and Law at the University of British Columbia, Canada. Her research and teaching are in the areas of gender and race inequality, organizations, and the law. Much of her work focuses on employment discrimination and the impact of anti-discrimination laws and workplace diversity policies on gender, race, and ethnic inequality at work. Her recent scholarship appears in the Law and Society Review, Research on the Sociology of Work, and the American Sociological Review.

Hazel Hollingdale is a PhD student in sociology at the University of British Columbia, Canada. Her primary research interests are in gender, work, and the effects of organizational structures on social processes and inequality. She is currently completing a study on the organizational response to occupational health and safety issues in high-risk, male-dominated fields.

Barbara E. Hopkins is Associate Professor of Economics at Wright State University in Dayton, Ohio, USA. She teaches courses on comparative economics, capitalism, gender, and the global economy. Her research focuses on the interaction between the economic system and the gender system, consumption choices, and pluralism in economics. She has published in Feminist Economics, Feminist Studies, the Review of Radical Political Economics, and in several edited volumes.

Marlene Kim is Professor of Economics at the University of Massachusetts-Boston, USA. She specializes in race and gender discrimination in employment and the working poor. She has published Race and Economic Opportunity in the Twenty-First Century (Routledge, 2007) as well as numerous scholarly articles on these topics. She is the recipient of IAFFE’s first Rhonda Williams Prize for her work on race and gender discrimination.
discrimination and serves as Associate Editor of Feminist Economics and on the editorial boards of Industrial Relations, the Review of Radical Political Economics and Pan Economics. She holds a PhD in economics from the University of California, Berkeley.

Elizabeth M. King is Director of Education of the World Bank. In this position, she is the World Bank’s senior spokesperson for global policy and strategic education issues in developing countries. Prior to her current position, she headed the Bank’s research group that focuses on human development. She has published on topics such as household investments in human capital; the linkages between education, poverty, and economic development; gender issues in development, especially women’s education; education finance, and the impact of decentralization reforms. She has a PhD in economics from Yale University and a BA from the University of the Philippines.

Jeni Klugman is the Director, Gender and Development, World Bank. She was the former director and lead author of the three global Human Development Reports published by the United Nations Development Programme: on human mobility (2009), pathways to human development (2010) and equity and sustainability (2011). Klugman has published a number of books, papers, and reports on topics ranging from poverty reduction strategies and labor markets to conflict, health reform, education, and decentralization. She holds a PhD in economics from the Australian National University. She also has graduate degrees in development economics, as well as in law, from Oxford University where she was a Rhodes Scholar.

Milorad Kovacevic is Chief Statistician at the Human Development Report Office of UNDP. Before joining UNDP, he was working as a methodologist at Statistics Canada, the national statistical office of Canada, for more than 17 years, of which for the last 11 years he was chief of research in data analysis methods unit at the methodology branch. He also worked for the Federal Statistical Office of Yugoslavia and was teaching statistics at the University of Belgrade, Serbia, and the University of Iowa, Iowa City, United States. He has published in the area of analysis of complex survey data, inference on finite populations, and income inequality and polarization. He received a PhD in statistics from the University of Belgrade.

Karl Krupp is the Program Director for Public Health Research Institute of India and a Research Associate at Florida International University in Miami. He has an MSc in public health from London School of Hygiene and Tropical Medicine. Over the last decade, he has carried out mixed methods research on a variety of issues related to women’s health including HIV prevention, reproductive health, cancer prevention, and maternal health. His current research interests include the genetic causes of chronic disease, healthcare access for women, and research ethics.

Dominique Lallement has over 40 years of experience in international development, mostly with the World Bank. Trained as an economist at Princeton University, she is now engaged as an international development consultant, focusing on gender equality in infrastructure investments and services, trade and labor markets, and agriculture and rural development. She has worked extensively in Sub-Saharan Africa and Latin America, in the Middle East and North Africa, and in South and East Asia. She serves on the Board of three NGOs, focused respectively on scholarships for women from developing countries, energy grants to Africa, and cultural heritage, and is a volunteer mentor to youth entering the job market.

Hannah Liepmann is a PhD student in economics at Humboldt-University, Berlin, Germany. Her research interests include empirical labor economics and gender economics. She has a BSc in economics from European-University Viadrina in Germany. In 2010, she interned for six months with the Institute for Women’s Policy Research in Washington, DC.

Purnima Madhivanan is an Associate Professor in Epidemiology at Robert Stempel College of Public Health and Social Work at Florida International University in Miami, USA. She is a physician by training with an MPH and PhD in epidemiology from the University of California, Berkeley. Her research focuses on women’s health issues across the life span, particularly among disadvantaged populations. Her current projects include interventions integrating antenatal care and HIV testing among rural populations in India; and studies identifying barriers and facilitators to increased uptake of primary and secondary prevention of cervical cancer in the US and India.

Nisrine Mansour is a social researcher and documentary filmmaker holding a PhD in social policy from the London School of Economics and an MA in documentary filmmaking from the London College of Communication, UK. She is a former research fellow at the University of Oxford’s Refugee Studies Centre and has taught on the MSc in Social Policy and Development at the London School of Economics. She has several publications on the intersections between gender, family law, religion, civil society, forced migration, and statelessness in Lebanon and the Middle East and is currently working on multimedia research projects on related topics.

Elaine McCrate teaches Economics and Women’s and Gender Studies at the University of Vermont, USA. Her current research examines contemporary changes in the social coordination of time, especially between the workplace and the family.

Lynn McIntyre is currently Professor and Canadian Institutes for Health Research (CIHR) Chair in Gender and Health in the Department of Community Health Sciences, Faculty of Medicine, University of Calgary, Alberta, Canada. Dr McIntyre holds both a medical degree and Master’s degree in community health and epidemiology from the University of Toronto. She is also a Fellow of the Royal College of Physicians of Canada in Public Health and Preventive Medicine. She has studied food insecurity for 20 years using a variety of methods and with diverse disadvantaged populations both in Canada and globally.

Nidhiya Menon is Associate Professor of Economics at Brandeis University, USA. Her areas of research and teaching are empirical development economics, labor, and demography. She received a BA from Mount Holyoke College in 1994 and a PhD in economics from Brown University in 2001.

Julie A. Nelson is a Professor of Economics at the University of Massachusetts Boston, USA. She is the author of Economics for Humans (2006) and Feminism, Objectivity, and Economics (1996); coeditor of Beyond Economic Man (1993) and Feminist Economics Today (2003); and the author of many articles in journals including Econometrica, Vy T. Nguyen is an Education Economist at the World Bank’s Human Development Network, Education Unit. Her current work focuses on issues of inequalities in education. In her role as an economist, she provided assistance to the development of the World Bank Group Education Strategy 2020 and conducted research in a number of topics including education, women’s fertility and labor force participation, and financial market development. She received a PhD in economics from The American University, Washington, DC, with a dissertation focused on financial market liberalization policies and development.

Amy North works in the field of gender, education, and international development. She has worked in a range of NGOs and research organizations in Latin America, Africa, and the UK and is currently based at the Institute of Education, University of London, UK. Her particular research interests include global policy on gender and education and the role of NGOs and international agencies; and women’s literacy and adult education, particularly in the context of migration.

Patricia E. (Ellie) Perkins is a Professor in the Faculty of Environmental Studies, York University, Canada, where she teaches and advises students in the areas of ecological economics, community economic development, and critical interdisciplinary research design. Her research focuses on feminist ecological economics, climate justice, participatory community, and watershed-based environmental education. She currently directs an international research project on climate justice and equity in watershed management with partners in Mozambique, South Africa, and Kenya, and works with the GreenXChange Project on green community development in northwest Toronto. She holds a PhD in economics from the University of Toronto.

V. Spike Peterson is a Professor in the School of Government and Public Policy at the University of Arizona, USA, with courtesy appointments in the Department of Gender and Women’s Studies, Institute for LGBT Studies and International Studies. Her 2003 book, A Critical Rewriting of Global Political Economy: Reproductive, Productive and Virtual Economies, introduced an alternative analytic for examining intersections of ethnicity/race, class, gender, and national hierarchies in the context of neoliberal globalization. Her current research focuses on informalization, intersectionality, and global insecurities.

Anandita Philipose is a development professional who has been working with the United Nations in the areas of gender, health, education, and food insecurity for several years. She has worked on these issues in a variety of different contexts in Africa, Asia, Europe, and North America. This builds on her work grounded in her Master’s degree program in Public Administration from Cornell University, New York, USA. She has previously published articles on gender, food insecurity, and mother and child health, and contributed to numerous articles on development issues through her work with the UN.

Janneke Plantenga is Professor of Economics at University of Utrecht, The Netherlands. She is a member and coordinator of the European Expert Group on Gender, Social Inclusion and Employment. Her research interest focuses on labour market flexibiliza-tion, the reconciliation of work and family, and European social policy. She has written widely on redistribution of unpaid work, changing working-time patterns, childcare issues, and modernizing social security. She is the Dutch expert and coordinator of the European Network of Experts on Gender Equality (ENEGE).

Marilyn Power is Professor of Economics at Sarah Lawrence College, USA. She is coauthor, with Deborah M. Figart and Ellen Mutari, of Living Wages, Equal Wages: Gender and Labor Market Policies in the United States (Routledge, 2002). She has also served on the elected Board of Directors of the International Association for Feminist Economics.

Chantal Remery is Assistant Professor at the Utrecht School of Economics, The Netherlands, and is a coordinator of the European Network of Experts on Gender Equality (ENEGE). She has worked on other European projects with a gender focus including WELLKNOW and NESY and has written on reconciliation, flexible working time and employers’ policy. She is coauthor, with Janneke Plantenga, of The Provision of Childcare Services: A Comparative Review of 30 European Countries (European Commission, 2009).

Yana van der Meulen Rodgers is Associate Professor of Women’s and Gender Studies at Rutgers University, USA. She teaches and conducts research on gender and economic development and economics of the family. She received her BA from Cornell University in 1987 and her PhD in economics from Harvard University in 1993. In 2011, she was elected President-Elect of the International Association for Feminist Economics.

Krista Rondeau is a registered dietitian and holds a Master’s degree in health promotion studies from the University of Alberta, Canada. For her thesis, she conducted qualitative research on how farmwomen in Canada conceptualized food safety within the context of their daily food provisioning practices. She is currently a Senior Research Associate with the Department of Community Health Sciences at the University of Calgary and works on both domestic and international-focused household food insecurity and food-provisioning research projects.

Mishka Saffar is a development expert who has worked for the United Nations and the European Commission. Following her Master’s program in Politics of Development at Stockholm University, Sweden, she has specialized in the areas of food security, agricultural development, humanitarian assistance, and sustainable management of natural resources, in Uganda, India, Europe, and Brazil. Through her work with the UN and the European Commission, she has contributed to policy-making and program design, as well as to several reports and articles on development issues. Currently based in Brazil, she works as a freelancer, with a focus on food security, alternate livelihoods, and water resources management.

Stephanie Seguino is Professor of Economics at the University of Vermont, USA. Prior to obtaining a PhD from The American University, she served as an economist in Haiti for several years in the ‘Baby Doc’ era. Her current research explores the relationship between inequality, growth, and development. A major focus of that work explores the effect of gender equality on macroeconomic outcomes. She is Research Associate at the School of Oriental and African Studies (SOAS), University of London, Research Scholar at the Political Economy Research Institute, instructor in the African Program...
Irene van Staveren is Professor of Human Resources and Local Development at the International Institute of Social Studies, Erasmus University, The Netherlands. She has published widely in development economics, ethics, feminist economics, and heterodox economics. Her published book is The Values of Economics: An Aristotelian Perspective (Routledge, 2001).

Natasha Stecy-Hildebrandt is a PhD student in sociology at the University of British Columbia, Canada. Her broad research interests lie in gender, work, family, and inequality. She is currently completing a study of parental leave-taking among fathers in Canada.

Sarah Twigg is a consultant in the World Bank’s Gender and Development Unit. Prior to joining the World Bank, she worked as a researcher for two global Human Development Reports (2010 and 2011) published by the United Nations Development Programme, and as a gender and climate finance consultant for UN Women. She also has experience practicing as a commercial lawyer in New Zealand and New York. She holds a Master’s degree in international politics and business from New York University and Bachelor’s degrees in law and political science from the University of Otago, New Zealand.

Elaine Unterhalter is a Professor of Education and International Development at the Institute of Education, University of London, UK. She has more than 25 years experience working on themes concerned with gender, race, and class inequalities and their bearing on education. Her specialist interests are in the capability approach and human development and education in Africa, particularly South Africa. Her current concerns are with education, poverty, and global social justice. Her book Gender, Schooling and Global Social Justice won first prize in the Society of Education Studies book awards in 2008. She is currently working with a number of UN agencies on aspects of gender and the Millennium Development Goals.

Tonia L. Warnecke is Assistant Professor of International Business at Rollins College, USA. She has a PhD in economics from the University of Notre Dame, USA. She is internationally known for her research on the gender dimensions of development, particularly with regard to informal labor, social welfare, and international finance. In 2009, she was awarded the Young Scholars award by the European Society for the History of Economic Thought and in 2012 she received a Best Paper Award for her research on female entrepreneurship in China and India. She currently serves on the board of the Association for Institutional Thought, the executive council of the Association for Social Economics, and the board of two professional journals.

Rita Watterson spent several years traveling and working throughout Asia and Latin America following her undergraduate studies at McGill University, Canada, and it was during these experiences that she was introduced to global health issues. Upon returning to Canada, she completed a Master of Public Health degree at Simon Fraser University. In 2010, she began a medical degree at the University of Calgary in order to pursue frontline global health work and population-level research.
Doris Weichselbaumer is Associate Professor at the Department of Economics as well as at the Department for Gender and Women’s Studies at the University of Linz, Austria. Her research interests include feminist economics and labor economics as well as gender and postcolonial studies.

Brigitte Young has retired from a professorship at the Institute of Political Science, University of Muenster, Germany. She has taught at the Free University Berlin, and was Research Associate at Georgetown University, Science-Po (CERI) in Paris and Lille, and Warwick University. She is presently Guest Professor at the Central European University in Budapest and the German delegate and Working Group leader for New Global Finance and Financial Stability (EU-COST project). Her research areas include global financial markets and crises with an emphasis on the eurozone and the role of Germany, and theories of international political economy. She has published widely in English and German (with translations in other languages).

Eduardo Zambrano is Associate Professor of Economics at Cal Poly in San Luis Obispo, California, USA. His research spans the fields of general equilibrium theory, game theory, decision theory, political economy, and welfare economics. Professor Zambrano worked in 2002 as a consultant to Venezuela’s Congressional Budget Office and in 2003 as a Senior Researcher at Venezuela’s Central Bank. He has also worked as a consultant to the Human Development Report Office of the United Nations Development Programme in matters regarding the measurement of human development, the measurement of gender inequality, and the measurement of the impact of environmental sustainability on human development.