
Acknowledgements

This book is the result of reflections and thoughts developed through time from the exchanges of ideas with colleagues as well as experts in the heritage field. We ought to also mention the stimulus received from the students of different geographic and professional backgrounds that we have met in the past years. The list is very long; to avoid the risk of neglecting somebody we wish to thank them all. We thank in particular those colleagues and experts who contributed to this handbook cooperating generously with us to finalize this long work. We are particularly thankful to Alan Peacock whose insights have been very useful and precious, as ever.

