

Acknowledgments

As with any other project of this kind, we owe a debt of gratitude to a number of persons and institutions for their support and cooperation. We received valuable support both for the Corporate Governance in the Post, Post World symposium hosted by the New Zealand Governance Centre at The University of Auckland in April 2010 and in bringing out this volume of the papers presented at the symposium. In particular, we are grateful to The University of Auckland for providing financial support for the symposium. Funding from the Law Foundation of Ontario and The University of Auckland was helpful in securing student and editorial support for this volume, and we express our thanks.

Michelle Boodhoo and Marissa Kirsh, law students at the University of Ottawa, and Julie McMeikan of Auckland, New Zealand, provided invaluable help by carrying out style and citation checks and proofreading. Their assistance made our editorial task simpler and more enjoyable. We have valued working with Ben Booth and John-Paul Macdonald at Edward Elgar Publishing, who have been supportive and encouraging throughout.

Lest we forget, we owe enormous thanks to the contributors to the volume. We have been fortunate in having a wonderful working relationship with all of them since October 2009 when we began our planning for the symposium. Working on the several interesting articles written by a wide range of scholars from different jurisdictions was a truly rewarding experience for us. It is satisfying that our combined efforts have resulted in this volume, which we trust will make a meaningful contribution to the ongoing debate on corporate governance.
