Contributors

Daniele Checchi is Professor of Economics at the University of Milan. He held visiting positions in several European and US universities, and he was Fulbright Chair at Georgetown University in 2011. His current research interests include the economics of education, intergenerational mobility, labour market institutions and union density.

Antonio M. Chiesi is Professor of Methodology of the Social Sciences at the Department of Social and Political Sciences, and Director of the Graduate School in Social and Political Sciences at the University of Milan. He is currently board member of the Research Committee 45 on Rational Choice of the International Sociological Association, and member of the scientific committee of the Centre de recherche pour l’étude et l’observation des conditions de vie in Paris.

Ronald Dore learned Japanese during World War II and has spent most of his life studying Japanese society and economy. Two of his major themes have been, firstly, ‘the late development effect’ – what other countries which embarked on modernization even later than Japan can learn from Japan, particularly a propos education and industrial relations, and secondly, corporate governance in the advanced democracies, original divergence and gradual convergence. In the last decade, he has written polemical books in Japanese on corporate governance, work, foreign policy and nuclear proliferation.

Masanobu Ido is Professor of Political Science at Waseda University in Tokyo. His research focuses on comparative political economy, with special emphasis on contemporary Japan. He has edited a volume, Varieties of Capitalism, Types of Democracy and Globalization (2012).

Hideko Magara is Professor of Political Science at Waseda University in Tokyo. She is editor of Economic Crises and Policy Regimes: The Dynamics of Policy Innovation and Paradigmatic Change (forthcoming, 2014, Edward Elgar). She was formerly President of the Japan Association for Comparative Politics, and is currently a member of the Council of the House of the Representatives Electoral Districts in Japan.
Stefano Sacchi is Assistant Professor of Political Science at the Department of Social and Political Sciences of the University of Milan and an Affiliate at the Collegio Carlo Alberto of Turin, where he coordinates the Master’s course in Public Policy and Social Change (MAPS). His recent scholarship has focused on labour market and social protection reforms in advanced economies. His most recent book is The Political Economy of Work Security and Flexibility (with F. Berton and M. Richiardi, 2012).

Paolo Segatti is Professor of Political Sociology at the University of Milan. He has been the President of the Association for Italian National Election Study (Itanes) since 2010. He has participated in several European research projects and published volumes and articles on comparative political behavior, political culture, European studies and national identities.

Toshimitsu Shinkawa is Professor of Political Science at Kyoto University in Japan. He is past President of the Japan Association for Comparative Politics and the author of books and articles on comparative welfare states and labour politics. He is the co-editor of Ageing and Pension Reform Around the World (Edward Elgar, 2005).

Motoshi Suzuki is Professor of International Political Economy at the Graduate School of Law, Kyoto University. He has published articles in major international journals, including American Political Science Review, American Journal of Political Science, British Journal of Political Science, European Journal of Political Research, International Studies Quarterly, Journal of Politics and Public Choice. His current research interests are in Japanese political economy and international governance involving heterogeneous states and multiple policy issues.