Acknowledgements

I must thank Jonathan Vershuuren (University of Tilburg Faculty of Law) for his constant support, wisdom and expertise throughout this project. Invaluable comments were also received from C.J. Bastmeijer, W.J.M. van Genugten, H. Lindahl (all of University of Tilburg Faculty of Law) and L. Kotzé (North West University).

Support from the University of Tasmania (UTAS) Law School, especially my Dean, Margaret Otlowski, and my mentor, Gino Dal Pont, has been constant and generous. The library staff, particularly Deb Bowring, met all my research needs with speed and good humour.

Jonathan Pickering, Tim Stephens and my father John Lawrence provided invaluable feedback in the development of this book.

Nathan Bindoff, an internationally renowned climate scientist, provided generously of his time in reviewing the science sections of Chapter 1 of this book. Nathan is coordinating lead author for the Oceans chapter in the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change (IPCC)'s Fourth Assessment Report and a coordinating lead author for the Fifth Assessment Report under preparation.

Hayley Stevenson generously provided transcripts of UN climate change meetings – and helpful feedback – essential for the argument on climate change discourses (Chapter 6).

Various parts of this book were presented at a number of institutions and I would like to thank the participants and members of the audience in each case: London School of Economics and Political Science (LSE) Philosophy and Public Policy Lecture Series (organised by Richard Bradley and Luc Bovens), October 2008; Australian National University (ANU), Canberra, August 2009, Workshop on Environmental Discourses in Public and International Law (organised by Brad Jessup and Kim Rubenstein); ANU College of Law staff seminar, Canberra, March 2011; Wilhelm-Merton-Centre for European Law and International Law, Goethe University of Frankfurt, May 2011; Smith Centre for Enterprise and the Environment, University of Oxford, May 2011 (hosted by Chukwumerije Okereke, then Director of the Smith Centre Oxford); and the Australian and New Zealand Society of International Law (ANZSIL), Canberra, June 2011.

Michael Bothe and Rainer Hofmann generously hosted my visit to the Wilhelm-Merton-Centre, University of Frankfurt in May 2011. Richard Kinley and Daniel Klein of the UNFCCC Secretariat in Bonn kindly hosted a productive visit to the Secretariat in May 2011. Harro van Asselt facilitated my visit to Oxford in May 2011 and helped get this book started.

UTAS generously provided me with study leave for the first half of 2011, which included financial assistance, to make these visits possible.

I must thank the ANU College of Law for a Visiting Fellowship in February 2011. Kim Rubenstein, then Director of the Centre for International and Public Law (CIPL), was a generous host. Staff at the Australian Centre for Environmental Law (ACEL) directed by Tim Bonyhady provided invaluable assistance, especially Andrew McIntosh.

The following provided helpful feedback on drafts or assisted in clarifying my views: Harro van Asselt, Bridget Dunne, Sam Fankhauser, Matthias Hartwig, Marcus Hayward, Brad Jessup, Orr Karassin, Matt Killingsworth, Robert Kirby, Daniel Klein, Jan McDonald, Jeff McGee, Geoff Robin, Shirley Scott, Rick Snell, Fredrich Soltau, Hayley Stevenson, Michael Stokes, Greg Terrill, Joerg Tremmel, Steve Vanderheiden and Steve Waight.

Apologies if I have inadvertently omitted anyone who should be on this list.

Aaron Moss, Meg Good, Natalie Gillon, Katie Purchas and Laura Keys provided invaluable assistance with the bibliography and technical aspects of the manuscript.

Chapter 6 of this book draws upon material from within Peter Lawrence, 'Justice for future generations: environment discourses, international law and climate change', in Brad Jessup and Kim Rubinstein (eds), Environmental Discourses in Public and International Law (2012), © Cambridge University Press, reproduced with permission.

Ben Booth and his team at Edward Elgar have been a delight to work with.

My partner Anja made this book possible in too many ways to list here, including finding my Ph.D. supervisor and taking over my Jessup coaching duties in late 2012.

To my daughters: you are the inspiration for this book.

Finally I must thank Noisy Bob – my 10-year-old's pet rooster who got me up in time to ensure good progress towards the difficult final stages.

All errors and omissions are, of course, my responsibility.

The law is current as of 1 September 2013.
