We would like to thank a number of individuals and organizations who have been as passionate as we have about writing and publishing this book and who supported the research, policy development, advocacy and project work on knowledge cities and knowledge-based development.

First, we wish to thank the World Capital Institute (www.worldcapitalinstitute.org), for bringing us together under its Executive Board and also making resources available for the preparation of this book.

Second, thanks go to our publishing team at Edward Elgar Publishing, who had the foresight to recognize the value and relevance of such a text, and who have been extremely supportive during the evolution of the book.

Lastly, we would like to thank sincerely our fellow authors and reviewers, who have contributed to this project by sharing their knowledge and giving freely and willingly of their extremely valuable and scarce time.
