Tables

V.1 Characteristics of 17 longitudinal studies published in JoM and JVB
2.1 Descriptive statistics
2.2 Regression results
3.1 Cross-sectional three-form design
3.2 Longitudinal three-form design
3.3 Linear growth-curve wave missing design
3.4 Accelerated time-lag design example
3.5 Cross-sectional two-method measurement design
3.6 Two-occasion two-method measurement design
5.1 Example of comparison before and after a period
5.2 The development of Alcan from 1928 to 2007
5.3 Triggers for change at Alcan and Alcoa
7.1 Temporal typology of process and narrative data
7.2 Advantages and challenges of narrative data in longitudinal research
8.1 The research process and the main methodological choices
8.2 Hedström and Swedberg’s (1998) typology and the mechanisms in the FME study
10.1 The coding scheme
10.2 Real time/retrospective or both in process studies
10.3 The length of fieldwork in process studies
10A.1 Authors list (arranged by journal)
11.1 Characteristics of variance-oriented and process studies
13.1 A comparison of the two research approaches
14.1 Examples of data collection techniques
14.2 Characteristics of data collection techniques
15.1 Publication key
15.2 Profile characteristics of the Ivey-JFDI research sample
15.3 Theoretical and methodological orientation of the Ivey-JFDI research sample
15.4 OLS regression results
15.5 PhD dissertations completed using the Ivey-JFDI dataset
