

Acknowledgements

We have received significant help and support in the writing of this book and in completing the research upon which it is based. We would like to thank all those who allowed us to interview them or who have participated in the research in other ways. We are particularly grateful to the residents of Beech Croft Road, and to the staff and students of the Ceredigion schools who shared with us their experiences of nudging and being nudged. We would like particularly to thank Kate Bullen, Matt Hannah and John Williams for sharing their insights on the psychological, philosophical and legal implications of behaviour change in their respective capacities. We also thank Marc Welsh for stepping in and completing the final stages of the research associated with the gambling case study with such enthusiasm. We gratefully acknowledge the funding provided by the Leverhulme Trust for our project, 'The Time-Spaces of Soft Paternalism in the UK' (Grant number F/00 424/L), without which this research would not have been possible.

All our colleagues at the Institute of Geography and Earth Sciences, Aberystwyth University, have been a constant source of inspiration and consolation as we wrote this volume. We are grateful to them for making Aberystwyth such a wonderful place to pursue geographical enquiry. We are also grateful to the graduate students with whom we have been fortunate enough to share the ideas contained within this volume. Beyond Aberystwyth, we would like thank participants of the conference session on 'Governing Temptation', which we convened at the Annual International Conference of the Royal Geographical Society in Manchester in 2009, including Nick Gill, Margo Huxley and Janet Newman. We would also like to acknowledge the insights and support provided by Clive Barnett, Harriet Bulkeley, John Clarke, Nick Clarke, Rosie Day, Tom Hargreaves, Engin Isin, Bob Jacques, Ellie Jupp, Rachel Lilley, Nick Mahony, Wayne Martin, Ryan Powell, Sam Randalls, Denis Shaw and Johannes Stripple. We have produced four children over the duration of this research. We would like to dedicate this volume to our children and to the hope that they will be able to grow up in a more behaviourally progressive world.
