I would like to take this opportunity to thank all the people who made this journey so rewarding for me. I am deeply grateful to all of them.

First, I would like to thank my two PhD and post-doctoral supervisors, Professor Frank Stephen (University of Manchester) and Professor Jean-Michel Glachant (European University Institute). Both of them have been very supportive and inspiring advisors, and their complementary expertise has been very useful to guide my research at the crossroads of law, economics and policy. I will be forever grateful to both of them for what they have taught me about aiming for the highest standards of scholarship, as well as for their constant support and enriching inputs.

During the course of my doctoral work I had the opportunity to spend some time at the GRJM research centre in Paris. This was a unique learning opportunity, which provided me with a different perspective on my research. I would like to thank especially Yannick Perez for this opportunity as well as for stimulating comments on my research. While research can be in some cases a lonely experience, I greatly enjoyed the continuous interactions with all the members of the Law School at the University of Manchester, who greatly contributed through continuous interaction to making my PhD a unique learning experience. I would like to thank the Law School for sponsoring my doctoral programme, as well as GIS Larsen and GRJM for travel funds. This book would not have been possible without their financial support.

I would like to thank all the people of the Florence School of Regulation and of the Loyola de Palacio Chair at the European University Institute, where I pursued my post-doctoral studies. The Florence School of Regulation and the Loyola de Palacio Chair are unique organizations in the EU landscape, at the crossroads of academia and policymaking. I am proud to have been appointed there as an advisor in 2011. I owe special thanks in this context to Nicole Ahner, Annika Zorn and Leonardo Meeus. There are many other people who contributed to this research, and who should be thanked here, in particular Christophe Defeuilley, Ute Dubois, Dominique Finon, Michelle Hallack, Céline Hiroux, Eric Brousseau, Aymeric de Moncuit, Marcelo Saguan, Kim Talus and Georg Zachmann. Special thanks of course go to Vincent Rious, with whom I wrote Chapter 5 of this book.

I also owe a very special thank you to Professor Leigh Hancher (Tilburg University), whom I consider to be my 'godmother' in research. We founded together the 'EU Energy Law & Policy Area' of the Florence School of Regulation in 2010. This has since become a very successful initiative, which I will continue to pilot and develop with her in the forthcoming years. Another person I want to thank in this already long journey in academic research is Judge Marc van der Woude, who trusted me enough to appoint me as one of his référéndaires at the Court of Justice of the European Union (General Court). He is an inspiring figure, both humanly and intellectually. I hope I can emulate him one day. I also want to thank all the people at Edward Elgar who did a great job at editing this book.

Finally, I would like to thank my parents for instilling in me the importance of education from a very young age. I am enormously grateful to them, as well as to my brothers and to Alix for their constant support throughout.
