

Acknowledgments

This volume collects the papers that were presented at the September/October 2011 Festschrift conference honoring the life's work of Professor Thomas Weisskopf. The conference was held in Gordon Hall at the University of Massachusetts Amherst, the home of the Political Economy Research Institute (PERI). All of us at PERI felt highly privileged to have had the opportunity to organize and host the Festschrift conference, and we the editors have been equally privileged to produce this volume honoring Tom. Tom has been our teacher, mentor, supporter, critic, and occasional collaborator. We therefore know well from decades of observation and experience that nobody is more deserving of this honor. Neither the conference nor this volume would have been possible without the contributions of friends and co-workers. We must start with Judy Fogg, the incredibly competent and still always warm and gracious Administrative Director of PERI. When we say "we organized" the Festschrift conference for Tom Weisskopf, what we really mean is that we came up with some ideas on how to organize it and then Judy did most of the hard work to make it a reality. As always, we are very grateful to her for her efforts and great spirit. We also wish to thank Debbie Zeidenberg, PERI's Communications Director, for her efforts around the conference, in particular for organizing on-line video interviews with many of the conference participants. This enabled us to share some of the key themes of the conference—that is, putting "capitalism on trial"—with a much broader audience.

We have been happy to work with Edward Elgar Publishing on this project. We wish to especially thank Alan Sturmer, the Executive Editor at Elgar for his support for this project. We also wish to acknowledge Assistant Editor Alison Hornbeck, Desk Editor Chloe Mitchell, and our copy editor, Nicolas Wilson. Finally, Kim Weinstein did an outstanding job in producing the camera-ready copy of our manuscript.
