Acknowledgements

In developing the ideas for this book I benefited very considerably from my collaboration in a research project funded by the European Commission’s Framework Programme Seven (FP7), on ‘The governance of uncertainty and sustainability: tensions and opportunities (GUSTO)’ 1 (Grant no. 225301). Among the many colleagues involved in the project, I should mention my fellow coordinators: Jean-Claude Barbier, Dorothee Bohle, Paul Marginson, Antonio Martins, Ruud Muffels, Ralf Rogowski, Els Sol, Noel Whiteside; and those others whose contributions were particularly relevant to various themes of this book: Reinhard Bispinck, Barbora Brngalova, Luigi Burroni, Bernard Casey, Heiner Dribbusch, Manuela Galetto, Vera Glassner, Marta Kahancová, Maarten Keune, Ute Klammer, Ruud Luijkz, Guglielmo Meardi, Tibor Meszman, Oscar Molina Romo, Tomáš Sirovátka, Catherine Spieser, Ímre Szabo and Axel van den Berg. Kam Johal served as an exceptionally able administrator to the project. Our two main project officers at the European Commission, Ronan O’Brien and Marie Ramot, were also extremely helpful and supportive. The book itself is my personal project, and neither any of the above nor of course the European Commission are responsible for nor necessarily share any of the conclusions and views expressed therein.

Chapter 2 is based heavily on my article, ‘Beyond the flexibility/security trade-off: reconciling confident consumers with insecure workers’ (2011), British Journal of Industrial Relations, 50, 1: 1–22.

NOTE

1. The key findings of the GUSTO project were summarized in a special issue of Transfer, ‘Labour markets and social policy after the crisis’, February 2014, 20, 1.