

Contributors

Richard P. Appelbaum is MacArthur Chair in Sociology and Global and International Studies at the University of California, Santa Barbara. His main research interests are the globalization of low-wage production and its impact on workers, and the role of emerging technologies in fostering more equitable and sustainable economic development.

Minglu Chen is Lecturer of China Studies at the University of Sydney. Her main research interests are the institutions of China's local politics, private entrepreneurship and governance in China, class and social stratum in China, and China–Latin America Relations.

Christopher M. Dent is Professor of East Asia's International Political Economy at the University of Leeds. His main research interests are East Asian regionalism, free trade agreements, Asia–Europe relations, energy diplomacy and renewable energy development in East Asia.

Hugo Dobson is Professor of Japan's International Relations at the National Institute of Japanese Studies and the School of East Asian Studies, University of Sheffield. His main research interests are global governance, the G8 and G20, and Japan's role therein.

Jörn Dosch is Professor of Asia-Pacific Studies at the University of Leeds and Professor of International Relations, Monash University, Sunway Campus, Malaysia. His main research interests are International Politics of the Asia-Pacific, regionalism and domestic change in Southeast Asia, EU–Asia relations and relations between Asia and Latin America.

Melba Falck Reyes is Professor of International Political Economy at the University of Guadalajara. Her main research interests are economic Transpacific relations, Japan–Mexico historical and contemporary economic relations, processes of integration in East Asia and Latin America.

Fang Qing is a PhD candidate at Nanjing University. Her main research interests are European Union studies, global governance, and post-modern theory of international relations.

David S.G. Goodman is Professor of Chinese Politics and a member of the China Studies Centre at the University of Sydney. His main research interests are social and political change in China.

Jeffrey Henderson is Professor of International Development in the School of Sociology, Politics and International Studies and Director of the Centre of East Asian Studies at the University of Bristol. His main research interests are concerned with the political economy and sociology of global transformation with particular reference to the East Asian region. He is part of a global network involved in analysing the implications of the rise of China for other parts of the developing world.

Hong Yousheng is Professor at Nanjing University. His main research interests are European international relations, Europe–US relations, and China’s foreign policy.

José Luis León-Manríquez is Professor at the Metropolitan Autonomous University, Mexico City. His main research interests are regional economic integration, and the international political economy of Mexico, Latin America and Asia.

Simen Andersen Øyen is a PhD candidate at the University of Bergen. His main research interests are political philosophy, theories of democracy and modernity, and China and political processes.

Cheol Hee Park is Professor and Associate Dean at the Graduate School of International Studies, Seoul National University. His main research interests are Korea’s external relations, Japanese politics and diplomacy, Korea–Japan relations, and international relations in East Asia.

Rachel Parker is a Research Staff Member at the Science and Technology Policy Institute, Washington DC. Her main research interests are economic sociology, public policy, and international development as well as the intersection of science and technology with research capacity development

John Ravenhill is Professor and Head of the School of Politics and International Relations, Research School of Social Sciences, at the Australia National University. His main research interests are in global political economy, especially trade and production in the Asia-Pacific region.

James Reilly is Senior Lecturer in Northeast Asian Politics at the University of Sydney. His main research interests are in Chinese foreign policy, the international relations of East Asia, and the role of public opinion in authoritarian states.

Arturo Santa-Cruz is Professor at the Pacific Studies Department, and Director of the Centre for North American Studies at the University of Guadalajara. His main research interests are Mexico–United States relations, security, and identity politics in North America.

Yao Chaocheng is Professor at Shanxi University. His main research interests are regional integration in Europe and Asia.