

Contents

---

Preface	viii
Introduction	1
1. Thinking law	2
2. Outline	4
3. Didactic concerns	6
1. Legal order	9
1. ... And there was law	10
2. The heptagon of law	12
3. The knurled edges of the heptagon	17
3.1 Civil disobedience	18
3.2 Fundamental social rights	24
3.3 Torture	32
4. Contractual thinking and naturalism	36
5. Satisfying needs, self-preservation and freedom	41
5.1 The basic fallacy of naturalism	43
5.2 The need for needs	45
5.3 Self-preservation, self-determination and self-awareness	48
6. Summary	51
2. Justice, rights and human dignity	53
1. Self-determination and the balance of powers	55
1.1 Contradiction?	55
1.2 Self-determination and malleability	61
1.3 The social imaginary of political power	69
1.3.1 Some examples	69
1.3.2 From the first person singular to the first person plural	72
1.4 The lures of self-determination	78
2. Self-awareness as respect for human dignity: the totalitarian account	80
2.1 Recognition of the other at false bay	81

2.2	Law after Auschwitz	84
3.	The first person: captor and captive	87
3.1	The first person as the ultimate captor	89
3.2	The 'I' as the final hostage	93
4.	From recognition to a politics of recognition: handling two opposing principles	102
4.1	Alterity and alterity	102
4.2	Justice as the politics of alterity	107
4.3	Exemplifying the dynamics of justice	112
5.	Summary	122
3.	Positive law and sovereign authority	125
1.	Positive law – posited law	127
2.	Why legal positivism?	130
2.1	Two motives for legal positivism	132
2.1.1	Apprehensibility	132
2.1.2	Expediency	133
2.2	The tension between the motives	134
3.	The structure of legal positivism	135
3.1	Norms as practical	136
3.2	General norms	138
3.3	Sovereignty	142
3.3.1	Scientism	145
3.3.2	Historicism	149
3.3.3	The common fallacy of scientism and historicism	152
4.	Constituent power and constitutional power	154
4.1	Making sense	154
4.2	Making political sense: constituting constitutions	156
5.	Authority	158
5.1	Authority and reasons	159
5.2	Authority of Law: Lisbon v Lisbon	163
6.	Authority as opening up political identity	168
7.	The institutionalisation of authority in law	171
7.1	Independence of law	172
7.1.1	Separation of powers	172
7.1.2	Equality before the law	173
7.1.3	Democracy	175
7.1.4	Legal violence, coercion and punishment	176
7.1.5	State	178
7.2	Judging potential: law as a discipline	180
8.	Summary	181

4.	Legal knowledge and legal doctrine: validity of law	183
1.	Legal formalism	186
1.1	In demand of purity	188
1.2	Some distinctions	191
1.3	Norm and validity	194
1.4	Validity and effectiveness	202
1.5	Formalism and morality	203
2.	Legal realism	205
2.1	Predictivism	206
2.2	Social engineering	210
3.	Validity: norm-claims warranted	212
3.1	Practitions, propositions and domains of justification	213
3.2	One domain of justification	217
3.3	Justification domains as vectors: law and language	222
4.	The legal justification domain	227
5.	Validity and bindingness	232
5.1	Bindingness as pre-empted validity	233
5.2	Bindingness without validity, and vice versa	235
6.	Summary	239
5.	Following the law as following a rule	241
1.	Modes of interpretation	242
2.	Following rules: two puzzles	247
2.1	Tautology	248
2.2	Contradiction	250
3.	The icon theory of rules	252
3.1	Hunches and conventions	253
3.2	Icons and rules	256
3.2.1	Icons as rules	256
3.2.2	Perspective	261
3.2.3	Rules as icons	263
4.	A better account?	268
4.1	Giving Wittgenstein his due	268
4.2	Giving lawyers their due	271
5.	Summary	273
	Bibliography	275
	Index	295