Contributors

Susanna Alexius holds a PhD in management from the Stockholm School of Economics. She is a research fellow at Stockholm Centre for Organizational Research (Score) and lectures at Stockholm School of Economics, Uppsala University, and for a number of executive education programmes including IFL where she is a programme director. Alexius is interested in how organizations respond to demands from their institutional environment. She has recently published on the topics of organizing for and against professional standardization of management consultants, responsibilization of consumers, value-complexity of organizational hybrids, and the translation and commercialization of sustainability.

Sebastian Botzem is a research fellow at the Social Science Research Centre Berlin. He studied political science and holds a PhD in business administration. His research focus is on transnational standardization in accounting, regulation of financial markets, and the role of organizations in international political economy. Botzem’s recent publications include The Politics of Accounting Regulation: Organizing Transnational Standard Setting in Financial Reporting (2012, Edward Elgar).

Daniel Castillo holds a PhD in sociology from Stockholm University and is currently a research fellow at Stockholm Centre for Organizational Research (Score), Stockholm University. His research interests include the relation between state and market, with a focus on phenomena related to corruption, as well as how the state organizes new markets. Castillo has recently published the dissertation State Boundaries in Transition: A Study of Sponsoring, Corruption and Market Relations.

Jenny Cisneros Örnberg holds a PhD in political science and is Director of the Centre for Social Research on Alcohol and Drugs (SoRAD) at Stockholm University, Sweden. Her research interests include the interaction between domestic and European policy-making in the field of public health, specifically in the policy areas of alcohol, gambling, tobacco and pharmaceuticals.

Matilda Dahl holds a PhD in business administration and is a researcher in management at Stockholm Centre for Organizational Research (Score) where she has been working in the ‘Organizing Markets’ programme, studying processes of organization in the financial sector. Her research is focused on international organization, transnational governance, and various processes connected to a growing audit society. Dahl also works as an assistant professor at Gotland University.

Christina Garsten is Professor of Social Anthropology at Stockholm University and Chair of the Executive Board of Stockholm Centre for Organizational Research (Score). She recently joined Copenhagen Business School as Professor of Globalization and Organization. Her research involves globalization processes in corporations and markets, with a current focus on the role of think tanks in setting agendas for global governance and in influencing political priorities. Earlier works have focused on transnational organizational culture, on organizational visions of transparency and accountability for transnational trade, and on policy changes towards flexibility and employability in work life.

Ingrid Gustafsson is a PhD student at the School of Public Administration, University of Gothenburg. Her thesis work is on the increasing use of international standards and standard compliance mechanisms such as accreditation in Swedish public administration. Swedac (the Swedish Board for Accreditation and Conformity Assessment) is used as a case to understand the complex system of standards, certifications and accreditations. Gustafsson’s main interest is in the organizational implications such systems have for public sector organizing.

Martin Gustavsson is an associate professor in economic history and a researcher at Stockholm Centre for Organizational Research (Score) and Sociology of Education and Culture (SEC), Uppsala University. His research focuses on the interplay between economics, politics and culture in a historical perspective. He has studied different markets, all deeply embedded in social, political and cultural settings: for example the art market in Stockholm 1920–1960, the market for exclusive furniture in Sweden 1935–1955, the Swedish market for media technology 1973–2000, and the market for local shopping centres in the suburbs of Stockholm 1943–2000.

Andrea Mennicken is an associate professor in accounting at the London School of Economics and Political Science (LSE) and a research associate at the Centre for Analysis of Risk and Regulation (LSE). She received her doctorate from LSE in 2005 for a thesis entitled Moving West: The Emergence, Reform and Standardisation of Audit Practices in Post-Soviet Russia. She holds a master’s degree (LSE) and German diploma degree (Bielefeld University) in sociology. Her work has been published in both English and German, for example in Accounting, Organizations and Society, Financial Accountability and Management, Foucault Studies and with VS Verlag für Sozialwissenschaften. Her research interests include social studies of valuation and accounting, transnational governance regimes, processes of marketization, standardization, and public sector reforms.

Anette Nyqvist holds a PhD in social anthropology. She is a researcher at Stockholm Centre for Organizational Research (Score) and a lecturer at the Department of Social Anthropology at Stockholm University. Nyqvist’s research interests concentrate on issues of power at the nexus of statecraft and market-making. Her publications include Opening the Orange Envelope: Reform and Responsibility in the Remaking of the Swedish National Pension System (2008) and Organisational Anthropology: Doing Ethnography in and among Complex Organisations (co-authored with Christina Garsten, 2013). Her forthcoming book is a monograph of her current research on the financial and political strategies of institutional investors.

Martin Rosenström is a PhD student in management at Stockholm Centre for Organizational Research (Score) and Stockholm School of Economics. His thesis work is on aspects of organization in the construction of the European market for CO₂ emission allowances, with a focus on the Swedish context and on the practices of measuring CO₂ emissions. His research revolves around the organization of markets, with a special interest in how the forms of ‘market’ and ‘organization’, as forms of coordination, can co-exist.

Adrienne Sörbom is an associate professor in sociology, a research director at Stockholm Centre for Organizational Studies (Score) and senior lecturer at Södertörn University. Her research interests may be termed ‘political sociology’, and include the organization of global politics among different types of actors, such as trade unions, social movements and global think tanks. Sörbom’s work has been published both in Swedish and English, for example, in Statsvetenskaplig tidskrift, Critical Sociology, with Edward Elgar.

Kristina Tamm Hallström is an associate professor in management at Stockholm School of Economics and a research director at the Stockholm Centre for Organizational Research (Score). She has conducted research about legitimacy and authority in transnational standard setting and about the emergence and legitimization of certification and accreditation as audit practices. She has published several articles, chapters and books with international publishing companies. Tamm Hallström is currently conducting research on trust in eco-labels, as well as on the power and consequences of classificatory work in the context of management accounting and control in both private and public organizations.

Renita Thedvall holds a PhD in social anthropology and is active in the field of policy and organizational anthropology. Thedvall has a particular interest in how policies around, for example, quality in work or fair trade are developed, shaped and framed via indicators or standards. She is currently working on how the Lean Management model is negotiated, discussed, implemented and operates in public preschools. Renita is a senior lecturer and Director of Studies at the Department of Social Anthropology and a senior research fellow and Deputy Director at Stockholm Centre for Organizational Research (Score) at Stockholm University.

Karolina Windell holds a PhD from Uppsala University’s Department of Business Studies. She is research scholar at Stockholm Centre for Organizational Research (Score). Her main research interests concern the relationship between news media and organizations and, in particular, how the media creates, disseminates and legitimizes ideas about responsible organizational behaviour. Her studies include news production, corporate communication, reputation management, and corporate social responsibility (CSR).