Acknowledgements

I am grateful to Edward Elgar Publishing for commissioning this book, especially Alex Pettifer my initial contact with the book proposal, and John-Paul McDonald my commissioning editor and Bob Pickens, my desk editor. I also thank everyone who has been involved at the production stage. In the History Group at Sheffield Hallam University, Joanne Laycock commented on the first draft of Chapter 1, and Melodee Beals (now at Loughborough University) drew my attention to a conference on ‘Coping with Crisis’ at Durham University in 2013, which proved an excellent testing ground for my early thoughts on disasters. The Durham conference also led to invitations to write chapters in two edited volumes, forcing me to clarify my thoughts as I worked on the monograph. I am grateful to all at the ‘Coping with Crisis’ conference who commented on my paper either on the day or later. Other papers related to the disasters project were presented at the Sheffield Political Economy Research Institute (SPERI) conference at the University of Sheffield (2013), the business history workshop at the University of York (2013), the Management History Research Group annual meeting at Institute of Financial Services (IFS) University College in London (2014), and a staff seminar at China Foreign Affairs University in Beijing (2015). I send my thanks to everyone who took part in those events. Sheffield Hallam University’s Strategic Research Investment Fund kindly paid for background research relating to Chapter 5, and Chris Corker provided efficient research assistance. Teaching a final-year module on economic disasters to history students at Sheffield Hallam also helped me to focus my thinking.