About the authors

Professor Linda Brennan is a Professor in the School of Media and Communication at RMIT (Royal Melbourne Institute of Technology) in Melbourne, Australia. Her research interests are social and government marketing and especially the influence of marketing communications and advertising on behaviour.

Associate Professor Wayne Binney is an Associate Professor of Marketing in the Deakin Graduate School of Business, Deakin University, Melbourne, Australia. He is an active marketing researcher in consumer behaviour, sustainability and social marketing.

Dr Lukas Parker is an Assistant Professor in the Centre for Commerce and Management at RMIT University Vietnam. He lectures in marketing and advertising to undergraduate students and supervises postgraduate research students. His research interests are in social marketing and marketing communications.

Dr Torgeir Aleti is a lecturer in marketing at Victoria University in Melbourne, Australia. Torgeir teaches marketing subjects to postgraduate and undergraduate students, and supervises postgraduate research students. His research interests are consumer socialization with a specific focus on how consumers learn new behaviour and pass it on to others.

Ms Dang Nguyen is an emerging scholar in the Centre for Commerce and Management at RMIT University Vietnam. She conducts research into social marketing with an interest in public policy communications.