Acknowledgements

The completion of any book is a task that requires input and talent from many people. We would like to thank the following people without whom this work would not have made it to the publisher.

First, there are the contributors to this book who persevered through a sometimes arduous review and revision process. Their ability to collaborate across the virtual and physical boundaries that makes an international book has been a model of cooperation. The case study practitioners and author collaborations have been particular examples of how to make research-led practice work in the real world.

Second are the many anonymous reviewers who understood the importance of providing formative advice to sometimes new authors. In the extensive review process they managed to see their way through some academic flaws to make the practical case study chapters come to life as theoretically relevant practice. In the process, they helped to create some much needed and practically relevant theory.

Finally, there are the many supporters who have helped with various stages of production. There are our colleagues who provided formative feedback on the various drafts of the original report and finally the book. In addition, our heartfelt thanks go to Jodie-Lee Trembath for her editorial oversight in the final phases of the write up. Last but not least of our thanks is for Brian Llagas for his award-winning design and assistance with the trickier part of the visualizations of the models.
