Acknowledgements

This book is the outcome of my PhD project within the Swiss National Centre for Competence in Research on Climate (NCCR Climate), the completion of which would not have been possible without the skillful guidance, encouragement and support of my supervisor, Professor Dr. Thomas Cottier of the World Trade Institute of the University of Bern. I sincerely thank him for this. I am also grateful to Professor Dr. Joost Pauwelyn of the Graduate Institute in Geneva for taking time as a second evaluator to assess my doctoral thesis and for making his valuable comments and suggestions for its improvement.

I have good memories of thought-provoking exchanges with Professor Dr. Reinhard Quick (Saarland University in Saarbrücken) and I gratefully acknowledge his useful comments. I would like to thank Dr. Peter Holmes (University of Sussex) and Thomas Reilly (formerly with the University of Sussex) for sharing their expertise in the field of carbon regulation. I am also indebted to my husband Dr. Patrick Edgar Holzer (former Senior WTO Law Adviser to the Swiss State Secretariat for Economic Affairs) for stimulating discussions and exchanges of ideas.

I express my gratitude to Nashina Shariff, a graduate of the master of climate science program of the University of Bern for her fruitful co-operation on a number of projects over the last few years, and her excellent editorial assistance and valuable comments on this book.

This book benefited greatly from discussions at weekly meetings of the working package 5 on climate and trade of the 'National Centre for Competence in Research' (NCCR) Trade Regulation. I thank all the working package members for this. I am especially obliged to Dr. Dannie Jost for her useful assistance with literature search and computer skills.

While thankfully acknowledging the advice of many, all errors and shortcomings remain my own.

I would further like to thank my husband for his constant support and understanding, my parents, Larissa and Vladimir Gapotchenko, and my parents-in-law, Hanna and Walter Holzer, for their assistance, which enabled me to combine my being a mother of two little boys with working fruitfully on this book.

Finally, I am grateful to Curt Rommel Stiftung and to the law faculty of the University of Bern for their financial support.
