Contributors

Berg, Per Olof is Professor Emeritus in Marketing at Stockholm Business School at Stockholm University, Sweden, and head of Stockholm Programme of Place Branding (STOPP). He has previously been Director of Stockholm School of Entrepreneurship, Professor in Strategic Management at Copenhagen Business School, Denmark, and Associate Professor in Business Administration at Lund University. Berg has been doing research on the relationship between corporate culture and strategy, as well as on strategic marketing on political markets, and is currently involved in studies of the global positioning and branding of large cities around the world. He has also been working as a strategic advisor and consultant to companies, public organizations, non-profit organizations and cities.

Björner, Emma is a PhD candidate at Stockholm Business School at Stockholm University, Sweden, and a member of Stockholm Programme of Place Branding (STOPP). Her research is concerned with city branding, China, mega-cities, marketing and communication. Her main focus is on strategic branding and global positioning of Chinese mega-cities. Emma has an academic background in media and communications as well as in marketing and management, and has studied and worked in China, the USA, the UK and Malawi. She has published in the fields of city branding and event management.

Delman, Jørgen is Professor of China Studies at the University of Copenhagen, Denmark. He teaches China’s contemporary society and politics. His current research and recent and forthcoming publications focus on China’s ‘green turn’, China’s climate change politics, climate governance at city level, China’s energy politics, especially renewable energy, and the architecture of China’s biofuels market. Other recent publications examine China’s rural organization, and individualization and sub-politics in rural China. Professor Delman has extensive development consulting experience from public and private organizations relating to rural, agricultural, and food industry matters, and private sector development in China, Africa, South America, and Russia. He was Director of the China-EU Centre for Agricultural Technology 1991–96 and Director of NIAS Nordic Institute of Asian Studies from 2002–09.
Fan, Hong is Professor of Corporate Communication and Cross-Cultural Communication at Tsinghua University, China. She holds a PhD from the University of Oxford, UK. Her teaching and research are concerned with city branding, country image, corporate communication strategy, and cross-cultural communication. She worked as a diplomat in the 1990s, and taught in the US among other countries during 2005–09. Now she is director of the City Branding Program, and director of the PR and Strategic Communication Institute of Tsinghua University.

Fan, Xiucheng is Professor of Marketing and Director of the Center for Service Marketing and Management at Fudan University School of Management, China, and has previously been Professor of Marketing and Director of the Center for Service Management at Nankai University, China. He is on the Editorial Review Board for the Journal of Service Research, Journal of Marketing Science, and Customer Needs and Solutions. He has been doing research on branding strategy, service recovery, service quality, product recall, and value co-creation.

Jansson, Johan is Associate Professor at Uppsala University and affiliated with CIND (Centre for research on Innovation and Industrial Dynamics). Jansson has a PhD in Human Geography and his research interest is generally directed towards the field of economic geography, with a theoretical focus on agglomerations, local–global linkages, knowledge flows, creative (urban) milieus, quality, entrepreneurship and branding. These theoretical approaches are used in research on, for example, different cultural industries (e.g. design, music, arts), the internet industry, industrial districts, and urban and regional development. Jansson has published several articles, books, book chapters and reports on these topics and he is also teaching and lecturing at various levels.

Kornberger, Martin received his PhD in Philosophy from the University of Vienna in 2002, followed by a decade at the University of Technology, Australia, where he worked as Associate Professor for design and management and as research director of the Australian government’s Creative Industry Innovation Centre. Currently he lives in Vienna and works at Copenhagen Business School. With an eclectic bookshelf behind him, his eyes are firmly focused on organizations: how do we manage them? How do we strategize their futures? How do organizational cultures shape insiders? How do brands engage with outsiders? What makes some organizations more innovative than others? And what ways are there to make organizations behave more ethically?

Levin, Paul T. is the founding Director of the Stockholm University Institute for Turkish Studies. His teaching and research areas span the fields of international relations and comparative politics, with foci on images of collective selves and others in politics, Turkey–EU relations, Swedish public management, and Chinese political economy. Before taking up his current position, he taught international relations in the Dept. of Economic History and served as founding Program Director for Governance & Management Training at Stockholm University. He is a recurring guest lecturer on Swedish public administration at the University of Oxford’s Programme in Leadership and Public Policy and has been a visiting scholar at the School of Government at Sun Yat-sen University, Guangdong, China.

Li, Bailu is a Research Assistant at the Centre for Recreation and Tourism Research at Peking University, China. She holds her bachelor’s degree from Sichuan Agricultural University, China. Her main research interests are urban tourism and urban design.

Li, Jing is a Research Assistant at Shandong University, China. Her research is concerned with urban brands system, tourism planning and design. Her focus is generally directed towards urban branding. She is currently involved in quantitative research on urban brand values. She has participated in various tourism-planning projects, particularly in geological parks.

Li, Mimi is Assistant Professor at the School of Hotel and Tourism Management, Hong Kong Polytechnic University. She holds a bachelor’s degree from Peking University, China, her master’s degree from University of Waterloo, Canada, and her PhD from Purdue University, USA. Her research interests include tourism planning, tourist behaviour, hospitality and tourism marketing, and cross-cultural tourism.

Löfgren, Orvar is Professor Emeritus of European Ethnology at the Department of Cultural Sciences, University of Lund, Sweden. He has worked with questions concerning cultural economy and the worlds of ‘The Experience Economy’. His analytical focus is on everyday perspectives of urban life, as well as tourism and transnational movements. He has published extensively on these topics.

Lu, Qiulin is a PhD candidate of Tourism Management at the University of South Carolina, USA. Her research is concerned with tourism economy and management, sport and event management and place marketing. Her main focus is sport management, an area in which she has published extensively. She has also been working as an advisor to many government ministries and authorities within the area of rural tourism planning and sport management.
Branding Chinese mega-cities

Ooi, Can-Seng is Professor in International Business and Culture Industries at Copenhagen Business School, Denmark. He is also the Director of the Centre for Leisure and Culture Services Research. His area of research includes place branding, art worlds, cultural tourism and cross-cultural management. His research investigations have largely been comparative and focused on Denmark, Singapore and China. Besides being a prolific researcher, Professor Ooi is engaged in the practice community through his executive education courses and is part of the International Advisory Board for the Yellow River Arts Centre, Yinchuan, China.

Pandis Iveroth, Sofie is a PhD candidate of Industrial Ecology at the Royal Institute of Technology, Sweden. Her research areas focus on the sustainability of urban districts and the reduction of their metabolic flows. At the moment Sofie is finalizing her thesis using Hammarby Sjöstad as a case study.

Pasquinelli, Cecilia is a Postdoctoral Fellow at the Department of Social and Economic Geography, Uppsala University, Sweden. She received her PhD in Management, Competitiveness & Development from the Institute of Management, Scuola Superiore Sant’Anna, Italy. Her research is mainly concerned with place branding, inter-territorial branding, innovation branding, place marketing and FDI promotion. Recently her research has been concerned with ‘place of origin’ and economic geography of brand associations. She worked as research assistant at MAIN Lab (Management & Innovation)/Institute of Management (Scuola Sant’Anna) on projects focused on innovation policies in rural regions, related variety and ‘smart specialization’ in declining industrial regions, business support services and inter-regional knowledge networks.

Power, Dominic is Professor of Economic Geography at Uppsala University, Sweden. His research is concerned with clustering, regional and industrial competitiveness, and innovation dynamics. His chief focus has been the workings of the cultural economy and creative industries: in particular the music, design and fashion industries. He has also worked on geographies and spaces of branding, positionality and differentiation. He has published extensively within these areas. He has worked as a policy advisor and consultant to various Nordic government ministries and authorities in the areas of cultural innovation and industrial policy.

Qi, Rui is a Research Assistant at Shandong University, China. Her research is concerned with brand values and equity, tourism economy and management. Her main focus has been urban branding. Most recently she has been working on risk assessment of tourism development in the transformation of resource exhausted cities. She has participated in various tourism-planning projects, particularly in rural tourism.

Ren, Yuan is Professor of Demography and Urban Studies at Fudan University, China. His research includes population and development, aging, urbanization and migration, urban affairs and public policies, urban and regional development, globalization and Asian cities, urban sustainability, etc., with a primary focus on China. He is the author of many books and articles within this area and is also Fellow of New Century Excellent Talents awarded by the Chinese National Education Commission. Ren is also Deputy Director of the Institute of Population Research, and Deputy Director of the Centre for Urban and Regional Studies at Fudan University, China.

Sui, Xin is Assistant Researcher in the Asia Media Research Centre at the Communication University of China, and holds a PhD in Radio and Television Journalism from the Communication University of China. Her research is concerned with journalism and communication, as well as city branding.

Svensson, Marina is Associate Professor at the Centre for East and South-East Asian Studies, Lund University, Sweden. Her research is concerned with contemporary China and issues such as legal developments and human rights, media and the challenges of the digital society, independent documentary film, and cultural heritage.

Tang, Wing-Shing is Professor at the Department of Geography, Hong Kong Baptist University. He is a member of many editorial boards in the area of urban and human geography. His current research focuses on urban (re)development and planning in Hong Kong and the Chinese mainland. His research projects include ‘Land (re)development in Hong Kong: the land (re)development regime, hegemonic construction and the people’, ‘Utopian urbanism in Hong Kong’, ‘Urbanism in Asia: a comparison of China and India’ and ‘Chenzhongcun in China: surviving the hegemony’.

Wang-Védrine, Yu is a lecturer and researcher at the Ecole Nationale Supérieure d’architecture de Paris-Belleville (ENSA-PB), France, Tongji University, China, and HES-SO of Fribourg, Switzerland. Her PhD thesis was on environmental urban planning, and since then she has been working on issues related to sustainable city development. Wang-Védrine also works as an architect and urban planner in Lausanne. Her work mainly focuses on planning practices and their theoretical basis in varied cultural contexts. Her working experiences in different cultural contexts – China, France and Switzerland – are the main source of her reflections.
Wen, Chunying is Professor at the Asia Media Research Centre, Communication University of China. She holds PhD and MA degrees from the Department of Communication at Seoul National University, South Korea. She has done research in the Research Institute for Marketing Information at Communication University of China. She received her BA degree in information science at Hei Longjiang University, and a second bachelor’s degree in advertising at Communication University of China. Her research is focused on the history of advertising, persuasive communication and city branding. She has published extensively within these areas.

Wu, Bihu is Professor and Director of the Centre for Recreation and Tourism Research at Peking University, China. He holds a PhD from East China Normal University. His research interests are recreation and tourism geography, regional tourism planning, destination marketing, cultural impact of tourism development, and cultural landscape of tourist resorts.

Xu, Feng is Associate Professor of Tourism Management at Shandong University, China. The main part of his research includes brand economy and management, urban and regional economics as well as planning and development in tourism. His recent publications are based on niche theory and focus on urban brand construction in the Blue and Yellow Economic Zone of Shandong Peninsula. He has published extensively within these areas. He has also worked as a consultant for many of China’s provinces and cities in the areas of tourism planning and brand management.

Ye, Lin is Associate Professor at the Center for Chinese Public Administration and School of Government at Sun Yat-sen University, China. His research interests include metropolitan governance, regional development and urban politics. He has published extensively within these areas in Chinese and international journals. His most recent work has been focused on the development and governance issues in the Pearl River Delta (PRD) region in China.

Zhang, Guangming is a graduate student at the School of Government, Sun Yat-sen University, China. He received his bachelor’s degree from Guangzhou University. He is interested in regional governance, public management and urban policy.