This book originated in a fruitful collaboration between colleagues from the Monash Asia Institute (MAI) and the Monash European and EU Centre (MEEUC): Professor Marika Vicziany, Professor Pascaline Winand and Poonam Datar. This was a project that Pascaline Winand and Marika Vicziany had already contemplated when Pascaline first came to Australia in 2007. Our heavy commitments as directors of the MAI and the MEEUC prevented us from immediately embarking on this exciting project at the time. Several developments then conspired to give us the financial resources, time and research assistance to realize our project.

In 2009, Pascaline Winand was awarded a Jean Monnet Chair in European Integration and International Relations, which provided financial support for Pascaline and Marika to complete their research in India and Brussels over the 2009–2012 period. Poonam Datar joined our team in 2010 as research assistant after the completion of her Master of European and International Studies. Then as co-author, Poonam compiled a bibliography of relevant publications to the project; sourced archives over the internet from various international and government institutions; consulted in person the National Archives in London and the Historical Archives of the European Commission in Brussels; and assisted in setting up some of the interviews in Brussels and India. Both Poonam and another former student of the Master of European and International Studies, Emma Shortis, transcribed the interviews conducted by Pascaline Winand and Marika Vicziany. A research assistant from the Monash Asia Institute, Loveleen Kaur, was employed during the early stages of the project to gather journal articles for the project.

We would like to thank the Arts Faculty at Monash University for granting Pascaline Winand Outside Studies Program (OSP) leave in 2012. This helped immensely in providing much needed writing time away from the duties of director of the MEEUC. A special thank-you also to our colleague Natalie Doyle who aptly replaced Pascaline as acting director of the MEEUC during her leave and to Kirsty MacLeod, the manager of MEEUC, who did an incredible job of managing the center smoothly during Pascaline's OSP leave. Thank you also to Professor Rajendra

Jain (Jean Monnet Chair and Professor, Centre for European Studies at Jawaharlal Nehru University) for hosting Pascaline as visiting professor and for providing letters of introduction to access relevant material for this book. We also appreciate the support to the project by Professor A.K. Bagchi who organized for Marika Vicziany to present the results of her chapters on agriculture and industry to a symposium at the Institute of Development Studies, Kolkata, on 24 July 2012. She also benefited from the advice given to her by numerous people but in particular by Professor Ashok Gulati, Maseeh Rahman, Madhu Kishwar and Edgar Thielman. Various colleagues have also read drafts of chapters 7, 8 and 9, and for this we are grateful to Dr. Jagjit Plahe, Dr. Ranjan Ray, Dr. Pradeep Ray, Dr. Shalini Mathur and Dr. Giles Scott-Smith. We benefited from their feedback but, of course, none of these experts is responsible for any of the arguments we have made in this book, some of which could be controversial.

We would also like to thank our interviewees for making time to answer our questions in spite of their busy schedules. A special thank you to the staff of the European Commission, the Council and Parliament Archives in Brussels, the National Archives in London, the Indian Council of World Affairs' Library, the Ministry of External Affairs (MEA) Library in New Delhi, and the Monash University Library for providing invaluable assistance in helping us to locate relevant material for our research. Special thanks also to Dr Uri Gilad (National Centre for South Asian Studies), who drew Figures 9.1 and 9.2 in Chapter 9. A very warm thank you to Cormac McMahon for his insightful editing work on the text of our manuscript and to Alfonso Martínez Arranz for preparing the index. Finally, we thank the Edward Elgar editorial team for overseeing the publication.
