Acknowledgements

A great deal of thanks is offered to those who contributed to the making of this book. The conceptual and structural approach adopted is in part fulfilment of a three-year research fellowship with Griffith University, Improving the quality of global environmental governance and sustainable development. It has also been an unfolding journey of discovery that would not have taken place without my fellow travelling co-authors. I am indebted to Tapan Sarker, who works a flight of stairs away from me in the Macrossin Building at Nathan Campus, for suggesting that we should write a book together. But, as those of us in the academy know, one floor can be millions of light years away, and so I am grateful to the forces of the universe for bringing us together. Tapan provided the materials on the sources and means of the delivery of finance for sustainable development in this book. I also acknowledge my dear friend and closest collaborator, Tek Maraseni, with whom I have worked on many governance and emissions trading-related publications and projects. Tek is responsible for the statistical analysis and validation of the responses to the surveys associated with each of the case studies. My thanks go to my esteemed colleague Jamie Pittock and my study buddy Lauren Eastwood for making the interview materials and related commentary available for publication. I would also like to give an extra plaudit to Lauren for her excellent material on the CBD, and for jumping in at the last minute to give the text a pre-copy onceover with her eagle eye. I am extremely grateful to Federico López-Casero, another intrepid sustainability policy researcher, governance expert and friend, for making a lot of his personal time available to prepare the eloquent materials on FLEGT, PES and BOM. My appreciation goes also to Marnie Ryan and Ellie Cheney, who provided me with invaluable research assistance on more recent developments in FSC and PEFC. I could not go any further without giving due recognition to my very best friend, partner and (now) research colleague, Beth Gibbings, for her ‘forensic’ analysis of the criminal wheelings and dealings in the world of illegal logging. My thanks go also to the team at Edward Elgar, especially Alex Pettifer, who has been so supportive over the rather long gestation period for this work (we first discussed publishing possibilities at the 2012 Earth System Governance Conference in Lund), and to Victoria Nichols, for her helpful tips on dealing with EE protocols. To Hilary Cadman and Sam Bravery of Cadman Editing Services, your help was invaluable. Finally, as ever, I give homage to the trees that gave their lives for the (hard copy) version of this book; may they not have died in vain.
