

Acknowledgements

We would first like to thank Edward Elgar Publishing for engaging us and then being open to a new style of book on leadership that transcends the business world and academic audiences.

We would like to thank Freddie, Jane and Bill for their contributions and for sharing their gripping story of their personal journeys and the development of their businesses.

Stewart would especially like to acknowledge his co-authors. First, to Steve who was the first to capture Stewart's attention on the importance of leadership, firing his imagination and prompting a thirst to learn more about the subject. This has directly led to Stewart creating a business in his quest to become an academically-influenced practitioner assisting other business people to improve their leadership. Secondly, to Sue and her husband Laurie, who initially coached the QuoLux team on the facilitation and delivery of LEAD. He would also like to acknowledge all the business leaders who have shown great faith, belief and trust in QuoLux and in becoming involved with LEAD. Thanks also go to his business partner, Rachael, who has brought LEAD alive, playing a major part in its success locally. Finally, Stewart would like to thank his wife, Polly, for her dedication in transcribing all the interviews, reading and checking drafts and for her unwavering and loving support across the many months it has taken in researching and writing this book.

Steve would like to give thanks to both co-authors. To Stewart, who has the ability to stand astride academia and practice with astonishing skill and whose energy and drive has made this book happen; and to Sue, who has been a leadership learning companion for over ten years to become world leading in the application of communities of practice in the entrepreneurial context. The debt we owe to participating owner/managers and, more importantly, the debt that society owes more generally cannot be overstated. To my sons, Chris and Rob, I get more proud of you both every day. Finally to my wife Sarah . . . "you had me at hello".

Sue would also like to thank her co-authors: Steve, for the inspiration to begin LEAD back in 2004 and for unending support since then and Stewart, for his dedication to LEAD and the pedagogy and for making it such a success with some wonderful SMEs. Sue would also like to thank all the SMEs who have taken a leap of faith to participate in LEAD for the benefit of their businesses. Finally, Sue would like to thank all teams across the UK who have rolled LEAD out in their own institutions, and her husband, Laurie, who has expertly supported these teams to practically input a programme that isn't a traditional learning experience.

