

Acknowledgments

This work would not have been possible without the support, advice, friendship and mentorship of an outstanding group of individuals dedicated to the cause of international justice, sustainable peace, and the fight against impunity. These individuals include Phillippe Kirsch, who was instrumental in establishing the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court and became the first President of the ICC, and many members of the Court whom I consulted with while I was a Visiting Professional during the writing of the first edition. In writing the second edition, I am indebted to many academic and practitioner colleagues around the world who encouraged me to update the text from the first edition. I am grateful to my own faculty at the University of Ottawa for giving me a sabbatical leave to escape to Italy to update the text free of normal teaching and other duties. I am also grateful to the European University Institute in Florence who provided me with the space and resources to almost finish the second edition while on sabbatical.

I would also like to thank my excellent research assistant Ashley Geerts for assisting with the research and editing of the book. Her outstanding research and editing ability to assist with this daunting second edition in a relatively short period is testament to her immense promise and ability as a future practitioner in the many fields of justice that she is destined to excel in.

Finally, the greatest acknowledgment goes to my family, especially Sharon Lefroy, without whose support and patience, and indeed the ability to take time off from family obligations, this second edition would not have materialized.
