Acknowledgements

My work on the project began in the late 1990s. I returned to the United States to conduct post-doctoral research under a NATO fellowship at Cornell University. The late Robert Heilbroner, who was one of my mentors during my doctoral studies at the New School for Social Research in New York, was aware of my interest on issues of contemporary social and culture change from various doctoral workshops and encouraged me to examine the idea of positional markets and the intellectual contribution of Robert Frank. Over the years and as my research was expanding, I presented my work in conferences and workshops. I benefited from comments offered by participants at the International Conference on Humanities in Rhodes, Greece and the SCME Workshop on Culture and Economic Policy, which took place in the University of Stirling, UK and I developed working papers for possible publication.

One special debt of gratitude is to Matt Pittman and Katy Roper, of Edward Elgar Publishing, who have provided me with support and guidance to complete this book. I am especially grateful to Wilfred Dolfsmna, for valuable comments on several drafts of a working paper, which was part of an earlier manuscript. I am also grateful to Sheila Dow for comments and encouragement on a working paper, which was part of an earlier draft and to Malcolm Sawyer for his encouragement on my book proposal. I am greatly indebted also to an anonymous referee of the nearly completed manuscript in 2013. Overall, suggestions helped me to improve and clarify my presentation, for which I remain solely responsible, including any errors and omissions.

My pluralist approach to cultural political economy and/or to post-Keynesian openness to behavioural economics has been benefited by communication and discussions with Clas Wihlborg, Sheila Dow, John King, Philip Arestis, Gary Dymski, Matthias Klaes, Tony Lawson, Steven Pressman, Gary Mongiovi, Korkut Erturk, John Davis, and earlier, with John Eatwell, Edward Nell and Tom Palley. The usual disclaimers apply. I am grateful also to Nancy Remoundou, Fotini Papantoniou, Nancy Boubouli and Katerina Deiveki for administrative assistance during earlier stages of this project.

The political economy of status

My wife Eleni Bellou has made interesting and valuable observations on realities and paradoxes of consumer markets. I would like to thank her especially for her encouragement and patience during periods of intensive writing. Finally, my very special thanks go to my mother, Eleni, and my father, Thomas, who as a philomath impressed upon me the significance of historical, cultural and psychological experiences since antiquity in understanding the nature of economic and political processes.
