Acknowledgements

This book was conceived while I was a Marie Curie COFIT senior research fellow thanks to the generosity of the FP7 program of the European Commission, which resulted in the publication of my book entitled Climate Change and International Trade (Edward Elgar Publishing, 2013). While writing that book, I started thinking about the close links between climate change mitigation and energy-related issues. The broad thematic scope of this current book brings together various legal aspects of international energy governance, such as international trade liberalization, investment protection, environmental protection, energy security, and energy transit, which I have studied in my previous books: Theory and Practice of EC External Trade Law and Policy (Cameron May, 2008), International Trade and Investment Law: Multilateral, Regional and Bilateral Governance (Edward Elgar Publishing, 2010), and Climate Change and International Trade (Edward Elgar Publishing, 2013). This time around, the book looks at all these legal aspects and others from an international energy governance perspective.

I was fortunate enough to serve as a fellow at the Energy Charter Secretariat during the final stages of this book. That experience enabled me to see first-hand the intricacies of international energy policymaking. I thank my colleagues at the Energy Charter Secretariat for inviting me to be part of their home.

I am very grateful to my co-authors Andrew Filis and Ehab Abu-Gosh for uniting efforts to make this project a reality. I am also very grateful to Tarun Krishnakumar, Tathagata Choudhury, Ishita Sharma, and Catherine Wilmarth for their research input at various stages of the writing of this book. Lastly, I am most indebted to my wife for her tireless efforts to help.

Note for the reader: As is the case with legal research, at one point, one needs to draw the line, since there are constant developments in law and policy-making. Therefore, the cut-off date for this book was April 2014. Any new developments in legislation, case law, or policy related to the theme of this book after that date have not been included.

Rafael Leal-Arcas
April 2014