Acknowledgments

This book is the product of a long intellectual journey which began with an intrinsic interest in the democratic development of the post-communist countries of Central and Eastern Europe (CEE) while I was working as a doctoral researcher at the Department of Political Science at the University of Greifswald, Germany. The idea for analyzing welfare state development in these countries grew out of doomsday predictions with regard to European welfare states and the enormous importance of social protection for the consolidation of democracy during the transitional period which was characterized by social hardship for so many people throughout the region. However, quantitative data for analyzing the development of welfare policies within the framework of approaches established in the context of comparative welfare state research was lacking for the CEE countries. With support from a research grant from the German Research Foundation (DFG) (grant number JA 638/12-1, 12-2, Principal Investigator: Detlef Jahn), we set out to collect such data. Fortunately for us, we were able to lean on the experience and advice of Lyle Scruggs, whose work with the Comparative Welfare Entitlements Dataset (CWED) has been a great inspiration for this project. As a product of our collaboration, our jointly published CWED2 dataset now also includes the CEE countries. I would like to thank Lyle for his encouragement and advice on data collection and beyond.

I would not have been able to finish this book without the support and the gentle carrot-and-stick strategy of my PhD supervisor, Detlef Jahn – my utmost thanks for that. Always taking on new challenges in the field of comparative politics, he has been a great academic inspiration for me. I would also like to address special thanks to Olli Kangas, the second supervisor of my PhD thesis, for his extremely valuable and always to-the-point comments and for being the most supportive and pleasant person around.

Over the years, I have received valuable feedback from scholars at several international conferences and meetings, the ESPAnet conferences in particular, which have greatly improved my thinking and the quality of the analysis presented in this book. I would like to thank as well all those persons in social security administrations and ministries in the CEE countries for sharing their knowledge and important data with me.

Thought-provoking and productive discussions with my colleagues at the Chair of Comparative Politics at the University of Greifswald have offered invaluable input at various points of the project of writing this book, for which I am grateful. A special word of thanks goes to Nils Düpont not only for assisting with the data collection and taming Stata to produce the graphs I wanted to have for this book, but above all for sharing the office and some good music with me during the ups and downs of this project. I also thank Jan Helmdag for intriguing exchanges of ideas in later phases of the project and for being the most motivated academic progeny whom I have had the chance to accompany into the field of comparative welfare state research. Furthermore, I would like to thank all our research assistants in the project, above all Eric Lingner, for their diligent and meticulous involvement in the data collection process. Douglas Voigt, Arnd Plagge and Ashley Gongaware helped me greatly to improve the text. My sincere thanks also to Chloe Mitchell, Emily Mew, Victoria Raven, Harry Fabian and Rosemary Williams from Edward Elgar Publishing for all their help and support in processing the idea into a book.

Last but not least, I would like to express my gratitude to my family and friends who have accompanied me during this academic adventure with so much support and patience. My father in memoriam, I thank for sowing the seeds of interest in politics and society through endless discussions. To him and my mother I am truly indebted for their imperturbable faith, love and support. Onni and Vilma have been my greatest rays of sunshine during this project and the best reasons to finish. Patrick, my partner, I owe my utmost gratitude – thank you for your enduring support and patience, and for so much more.
