Acknowledgements

I am grateful to a number of people who assisted me in the creation of this book. First and foremost, I would like to thank Christian Helmers for contacting me in 2011 and offering me the chance to collaborate with him on an interdisciplinary patent litigation project with Katrin Cremers, Max Ernicke, Fabian Gaessler, Dietmar Harhoff, Paula Schliessler, and Nicolas van Zeebroeck. The work that came out of that project, which to some extent anticipated the current EU patent reforms, proved invaluable when considering the Unified Patent Court over the course of this book.

A large number of academics have encouraged and supported me since my days as an PhD student at Queen Mary. University of London, through my time as a post-doctoral fellow at the London School of Economics (LSE), my lectureships at Cardiff University and The City Law School, and my visiting fellowship at Waseda University. In this, there are simply too many to mention, but I feel I must thank Jonathan Griffiths, Dev Gangjee, Alain Pottage, Tatiana Flessas, Siva Thambisetty, Andrew Murray, Marc Mimler, Noam Shemtov, Duncan Matthews, Guido Westkamp, Uma Sutherland, Gaetano Dimita, Leslie Lansman, Georg von Graevenitz, Ian Walden, Malcolm Langley, Johanna Gibson, Phillip Johnson, Tim Press, Enrico Bonadio, Mara Malagodi, Tatsuhiro Ueno and Kazuhiro Ando.

I am grateful to the UK Intellectual Property Office, who supported the underlying research of this book with funding during 2014.

I would like to give special thanks to Rothna Begum in London and the McDonagh family in Galway – Thomas, Bridget, Sarah, Nicholas and Paul.

Luke McDonagh, January 2016