Preface and acknowledgements

This book had its origins in a previous Elgar project Transboundary Environmental Governance in Asia: Practice and Prospects with the UNECE Agreements (Marsden and Brandon, 2015). It builds on this earlier book, which focused on the UNECE regional environmental agreements with application in Asia as well as Europe, by evaluating subregional environmental agreements focused specifically on Asia. It develops this previous work by adding international relations and environmental management scholarship to international law, enabling interdisciplinary perspectives to inform the research and findings.

The current project considers nine existing regimes across southwest, central, southeast and northeast Asia, and proposes a tenth regime for the cross-subregion in south and east Asia. In addition to the focus on subregional agreements, two new issues are dealt with that were not addressed in the previous book: the role of China in relation to each of the agreements, and environmental governance of the Third Pole, the Himalayas/Tibetan Plateau. As an Asian subregion lacking in a specific environmental regime, the potential for this based on experiences in the other Asian subregions is analysed, and China’s position is evaluated.

Preliminary research for the book was conducted in Hong Kong. I would like to thank Professor Gabriel Lau, Director, Institute of Environment, Energy and Sustainability, The Chinese University of Hong Kong (CUHK) for hosting my visit as a Senior Fellow from December 2014 until February 2015; and to Professor David Chen, then Director, Department of Geography and Resource Management (also CUHK) for arranging the visit, hosting a departmental seminar, and organizing library access in connection with this.

I would also like to thank two people in particular for their wisdom in relation to this project, Professor Falk Huettmann, University of Alaska, Fairbanks, who met with me twice after the Polar Law Symposium in 2015, and has provided input to my Third Pole interests; and notably, Professor Timo Koivurova, Director of the Arctic Centre, University of Lapland. Timo has been an unflinching supporter of all of my efforts to date and, despite the considerable distance between us and challenges of...
Preface and acknowledgements

a very busy professional life, has always responded to requests for help at very short notice. Many thanks indeed to both of you.

Appreciation is also due to Professor Tim Stephens, ARC Future Fellow, Faculty of Law, University of Sydney, for kindly writing the Foreword at very short notice. I would furthermore like to thank the Elgar team (Ben Booth and Iram Satti in particular). Their support, encouragement, and a small extension of time to submit the final manuscript were invaluable to the completion of the book (and allowed me to move on to other tasks). I am finally especially grateful to the reviewers of the original and revised proposal for their consideration and wisdom, which improved the focus.

The manuscript was completed in July 2016 and is dedicated to my two youngest children, Harry and Isabel, from whom I was absent for too long during the work on the book. Thank you also Joseph and Anna – my other two children – for allowing me (mostly) the quiet time needed, and – as always – my partner in all my efforts in life, Liz.
