Acknowledgements

This book is a result of research that started back in 2006, when I wrote my Master’s thesis on anti-corruption strategies. Niels-Henrik Topp from the University of Copenhagen provided excellent supervision and it later encouraged me to pursue a PhD on a similar topic. The majority of my PhD research was undertaken while I was working as a full-time Senior Advisor at the U4 Anti-Corruption Resource Centre at the Chr. Michelsen Institute (CMI). I am grateful to my former U4 colleagues and the numerous anti-corruption experts and programme managers internationally that helped me understand the key challenges for effective anti-corruption programming. The support from key individuals at the World Bank, the European Commission and UNDP was paramount for data collection, and their sincere commitment to advance the state of knowledge encouraged them to give me their most valuable commodity: their time. In particular, I want to thank my former U4 colleagues Nils Taxell, Liz Hart, Aranzazu Guillan Montero, Sofie Arjon Schuette, Francesco De Simone and Aled Williams. Arne Strand from CMI was an excellent guide to Afghanistan. I also want to thank Heather Marquette for inviting me to give a guest lecture on my PhD thesis at the University of Birmingham, and for supporting my research ever since. Ultimately, however, this dissertation owes most to the intellectual stimuli of my lecturers and fellow students at the University of Cambridge, in particular the support of my PhD supervisor Professor Barry A.K. Rider, whose solid scholarship and unwavering enthusiasm helped me finish this book.