I am deeply grateful to the New Zealand Law Foundation without whose generous support, this book and a collection of related publications and outputs would not have been possible. I extend my particular thanks to the Director, Lynda Hagen and to Dianne Gallagher for attentive, helpful and patient practical support and guidance over the course of the research project.

I am grateful for, and acknowledge the time and input provided by, many individuals kind enough to allow me to interview them for the purposes of this book and related publications. In no particular order, I thank: Suzi Kerr, Senior Fellow at Motu Economic and Public Policy Research, Wellington; Professor Jonathan Boston, School of Government, Victoria University of Wellington; Dr Adrian Macey, Institute for Governance and Policy Studies, Victoria University of Wellington (former New Zealand Climate Change Ambassador, 2006–10); Professor Donald Anton, Australian National University; Jo Tyndall, New Zealand Climate Change Ambassador and Co-Chair of the UNFCCC Working Group on the Paris Agreement; Catherine McIntosh, New Zealand Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Trade; David Buckrell, Principal Policy Adviser, Ministry of Business, Innovation and Employment; Baoping Shang, Senior Economist, Fiscal Affairs Department, International Monetary Fund; Jung Lee, Energy Analyst, International Energy Agency; Ronald Steenblik, Senior Trade Policy Analyst and Special Counsellor, Fossil-Fuel Subsidy Reform, OECD; Kerryn Lang, Project Manager, Global Subsidies Initiative (GSI), International Institute for Sustainable Development; Mark Halle, Senior Fellow, International Institute for Sustainable Development; Christopher Beaton, Senior Policy Adviser, GSI; Samuela Bassi, Policy Analyst, Grantham Research Institute on Climate Change and the Environment; Vangelis Vitalis, (former) New Zealand Ambassador to the World Trade Organisation; Kennedy Graham, former Member of Parliament for the New Zealand Green Party; Stephen Kretzmann, Executive Director Oil Change International (OCI); Alex Doukas, Stop Funding Fossils Program Director, OCI; Eric Pyle, Executive-Director, New Zealand Wind Energy Association; Peter Hardstaff, WWF-New Zealand, Aaron Packard, 350.org Aotearoa.

In the latter part of the project, Associate-Professor Margaret Young of the Melbourne Law School provided invaluable guidance and feedback on critical aspects of the research and draft manuscript for which I am very appreciative.

ciative. I am also grateful for encouragement and input from the organisers of Joint Lund University and Stockholm Environment Institute Workshop: 'The Politics of Fossil Fuel Subsidies and Their Reform' held in June 2016 in Stockholm, and offer my particular thanks to Professor Harro Van Asselt, Stockholm Environment Institute's Oxford Centre and University of Eastern Finland; and Associate-Professor Jakob Skovgaard, Lund University, for editorial oversight of my book chapter 'Anatomy of an International Norm Entrepreneur: The Friends of Fossil Fuel Subsidy Reform' in Jakob Skovgaard and Harro Van Asselt (eds), The Politics of Fossil Fuel Subsidies and Their Reform (2018).

I would like to acknowledge and thank the Dean of Law, Auckland University of Technology School of Law, Professor Charles Rickett for his advice and support. I am also grateful to a host of other academic and professional colleagues who have offered advice and assistance throughout the course of the project. They include at AUT, Professor Allan Beever, Professor Bill Doolin, Professor Geoff Perry, Professor Kate Kearins, Melanie Lovich and Dr. Peter Skilling; at the Auckland University Faculty of Law, Professor Klaus Bosselmann, Prue Taylor, Professor David Grinlinton and Associate-Professor Kenneth Palmer; at the University of Otago Faculty of Law, Professor Ceri Warnock and Associate Professor Nicola Wheen; at Victoria University School of Law, Catherine Iorns, Reader, and Professor Alberto Costi; at the Global Subsidies Initiative, Ivetta Gerasimchuk; at WWF-New Zealand, David Tong; and at the Aotearoa Youth Leadership Institute, Rachel Dobric.

I was fortunate to have the help of a number of talented student research assistants at AUT, and acknowledge the work by Justin Maloney, Katie Hurst and Karl Schwartz. I'm also immensely grateful to Andrew Rockell for his insightful comments on selected draft chapters, Suzanne McMeekin for her proof-reading expertise, Sarah and Vincent Heeringa for friendship, inspiration and encouragement, and to Maya McNicoll (<https://yoomans.com>) for generous permission to use her powerful offshore oil rig illustration for the cover.

Throughout the project, I have had support and encouragement from an incredible group of life-affirming family and friends too numerous to list. Particular thanks and love go to Isa, Caspian, Seraphine and Pascale, my mother Faye Rive, and sisters Dr Susan Jack and Elizabeth Rive Gibson.

I express my sincere thanks to all of the above, and to the anonymous reviewers of the book proposal, none of whom are responsible for any errors or opinions expressed in the book.

Finally, I wish to thank Ben Booth, Alex Pettifer, Amber Watts, Finn Halligan, Sally Philip, Kaitlin Gray and the excellent team at Edward Elgar for guidance, oversight and assistance in bringing the book to publication.

This book has evolved over a number of years. An earlier version of part of Chapter 7 was published as ‘Anatomy of an International Norm Entrepreneur: The Friends of Fossil Fuel Subsidy Reform’ in Jakob Skovgaard and Harro Van Asselt (eds), The Politics Of Fossil Fuel Subsidies And Their Reform (Cambridge University Press 2018).

Parts of Chapter 7 and 4 also build on content in an article ‘Fossil Fuel Subsidy Reform: A New Zealand Perspective on the International Law Framework’ (2016) 27 NZULR 73 which, in turn developed from a paper presented at a seminar hosted by the Institute of International Law and Humanities at Melbourne Law School in October 2015.

The New Zealand Law Foundation – Te Manatū a Ture o Aotearoa – supports research in the law and develops legal expertise on major and emerging public policy issues through its legal research grants programme.

Since 1992 the Foundation has fulfilled a unique and important role in New Zealand’s political and social development through funding quality legal research in New Zealand. Many of its funded projects have delivered ground-breaking legal research and stimulated new thinking and debate around law and policy in New Zealand and internationally.

This is one of those projects; a legal research grant from the Foundation enabled the author to conduct research and interviews while based at the Faculty of Law, Cambridge University in 2013, for research fieldwork in Paris, Geneva, Warsaw, Canberra, Melbourne and Wellington, and for student research assistance in Auckland.
