Acknowledgements

Several institutions and individuals made this book possible through their assistance and support.

First and foremost, most of the research on which the book builds on was made possible by a grant from the Danish Research Council for the Social Sciences for the research project ‘The legal character of CSR (Corporate Social Responsibility): reflections between CSR and Public International Law, and implications for corporate regulation’ (2006–2010). I am also grateful to the Research Council for its grant for the collaborative research project ‘Ny styrings- og retsformer i Multi-Level Governance: Statens rolle mellem international, transnational, national og sub-national styring af bæredygtigt skovbrug’ (‘New forms of governance and law in Multi-Level Governance: the role of the State in international, transnational, national and sub-national governance of sustainable forestry’) (2010–2013), which also contributed to research informing this book. By enabling my host institutions to reduce my teaching load the grants provided for extended periods of coherent time for research and writing, which allowed me to develop the analysis on which part of this book draws.

For institutional hosting, my thanks go to the Department of Management, Society and Communication at Copenhagen Business School (CBS), where parts of the said research projects were developed into this book; to the Department of Society and Globalisation at Roskilde University where the research idea was conceived and the initial years of work carried out; the Institute for Food and Resource Economics at the University of Copenhagen, where some of the research was carried out; and the Department of Communication, Business and Information Technologies at Roskilde University where the research was finalised. For inspiring short term research stays in 2007, 2009–10 and 2013, I am grateful to the Danish Institute for Human Rights, Columbia Law School in New York City and the School of Law at the University of Nottingham. I wish to extend my thanks to Hans Otto Sano, Benjamin Liebman and Mary Footer, respectively, for making those visits possible.

While working on the research on which this book draws I have benefitted from views, advice and friendly critique from a large number of colleagues and experts in very diverse academic or practice-oriented fields.
Changing sustainability norms through communication processes environments. For the fruitful discussions and encouragement, I would like in particular to thank Annali Kristiansen, Anne Lise Kjær, Beate Sjåfjell, Ben Cashore, Bettina Lemann Kristiansen, Cedric Ryngaert, David Kinley, David Monciardini, Errol Meidinger, Håkan Hydén, Inger-Johanne Sand, Jacob Dahl Rendtorff, Jan Wouters, Jette Steen Knudsen, Johanna Alkan Olsson, Jørgen Dalberg-Larsen, Linda Nielsen, Knud Sinding, Lynn Roseberry, Mary Footer, Margaret Jungk, Mette Morsing, Michael Addo, Nicola Jågers, Nils Åkerström Andersen, Radu Mares, Rass Holdgaard, Steen Thomsen, Surya Deva, and Sune Skadegaard Thorsen, as well as colleagues at the departments and institutions that employed and hosted me during the work that led to this book.

I wish to also extend my gratitude to research librarians, financial and secretarial staff and supportive heads of departments at the institutions where I was employed during my work feeding into this book.

Moreover, I have been fortunate to have informative conversations with Professor John (G.) Ruggie in his capacity as the United Nations Secretary General’s Special Representative on Business and Human Rights and with members of his team, especially Lend Wendland and Vanessa Zimmermann. Conversations with Søren Mandrup Petersen and Ursula Wynhofen at the UN Global Compact, and with Genevieve Besse and Dominique Bé at the European Commission and the European Social Funds, respectively, also contributed valuable information. I also wish to acknowledge the participation and engagement by Professor Gunther Teubner at a workshop on reflexive law held in Copenhagen in November 2007, funded under the grant from the Danish Research Council for the Social Sciences noted above.

Further thanks go to my editor Laura Mann at Edward Elgar for her support and patience, to Jacqueline Tedaldi for very useful comments and for doing a wonderful job editing the text and references, and to the Governing Responsible Business (GRB) research environment at CBS for financial support for language and text editing.

Last but not least, I wish to thank my son Nicholas for his patience and understanding when I was working strange hours, physically absent or, maybe even more demanding, simply mentally absent with my mind pre-occupied by the research that informed this book and much of my other work during part of his childhood and much of his adolescence.
