Acknowledgements

This volume conveys the main findings of the COST Action IS1102 SO.S. COHESION – Social services, welfare states and places: the restructuring of social services in Europe and its impact on social and territorial cohesion and governance, which ran from 21 November 2011 to 30 April 2016. The Action was coordinated by Flavia Martinelli at the Mediterranea University of Reggio Calabria and involved 24 countries, over 40 research and university institutions and about 90 researchers and scholars in Europe.

In addition to the hard copy edition, the volume is published as an open access electronic book – fully available to the broader public and freely downloadable on Edward Elgar Publishing's website and in main libraries – thanks to a dissemination grant from the COST Association, which we gratefully hereby acknowledge. We take the opportunity here to enthusiastically endorse the COST (European Cooperation in Science and Technology) programme for its key role in supporting the circulation and development of knowledge in Europe and beyond – in general and with specific regard to our Action. Despite the fact that many of us were already engaged in comparative studies, in the course of the Action we still all learned a whole lot more about the diversity of national, regional and local service systems within Europe and gained an enriched perspective on the challenges facing Europe in this field. Special thanks must go to the COST Administrative and Scientific officers who accompanied our Action, Leo Guilfoyle, Andreas Obermaier and Rossella Magli, for their invaluable help in making it a success.

We also wish to express our gratitude to all the participants in the Action, including those who did not directly contribute to this book, for their generous and lively engagement in the Action's activities and for sharing their work; the content of this volume is largely based on the collective capital gathered in the course of the Action in the form of working papers and presentations. We also gratefully acknowledge and thank the discussants that attended our final conference in Reggio Calabria and the anonymous reviewers – two per chapter – who generously accepted to read the contributions to this volume, provided invaluable comments, and thus greatly helped improve its contents, albeit the final responsibility obviously rests with the authors. Special thanks go to Patricia Kennett and Misa Izuhara, the editors of the 'New Horizons in Social Policy' Series, who positively reviewed our book proposal and gave us precious advice, as well as to Alex Pettifer, Victoria Raven and Emily Mew at the UK Editorial Office of Edward Elgar, for their great support in the process of producing this book.

Last, but not least, we wish to thank the grant holder institution, the Mediterranea University of Reggio Calabria, in the persons of the Rector and his staff, the Rector's Delegate and the Administrative officer at the International relations office, and especially the research team and the grant management staff at the Department of Architecture and Territory, for their unsparing support throughout the course of the Action.

And we're in the middle of a 'perfect storm'. These days, government social services are being bad-mouthed and de-funded. The non-profit world is looking more and more like the for-profit world. The growing gap between rich and poor makes most of us very anxious about where we stand.
