I am sincerely grateful to those who shared their views and ideas during our countless discussions on the nature of competition law at various domestic and international fora. My gratitude primarily goes to Hannes Ullrich, Giuliano Amato, Pinar Akman, Philippe Coppens, Andreas Heinemann, Morten Hviid, Dov Jacobs, Ioannis Lianos, Giorgio Monti, Tetyana Pavlush, Axelle Reiter, Wojciech Sadurski, Giovanni Sartor, Heike Schweitzer, Daithí Mac Síthigh, Francisco De la Purta, Viktor Hryhorovych Andriychuk and Catherine Waddams. I am also indebted to my colleagues, friends and family in Stirling, Kyiv, Lutsk, Norwich, Florence and Prague for their help in the preparation of this book, and in particular to my parents Nataliya and Mykhailo, my wife Tetyana and my dearest godmother and grandparents, who have been waiting for this study to be accomplished. I would also like to thank my publisher and in particular Ben Booth, Iram Satti, Catherine Cumming and Amber Watts for their very professional approach to the whole project as well as the anonymous reviewers for helpful suggestions and constructive criticism. I am very grateful to the institutions which at different times have shaped my research identity: Volyn University (Lutsk, Ukraine), Ukrainian Academy of Foreign Trade (Kyiv, Ukraine), Charles University (Prague, the Czech Republic), European University Institute (Florence, Italy), the ESRC Centre for Competition Policy, UEA (Norwich, UK) and University of Stirling (UK). The final part of the research has been supported by the British Academy/Leverhulme small grants scheme and was undertaken during research leave granted by the University of Stirling.
