Acknowledgements

This book would have been impossible without the inspiration, support and encouragement of several people. My first round of thanks goes to Professor Dr Helen Xanthaki for her sharp ideas and for cheering me on, when I most needed it. Helen, I value your warmth and positivity and I am proud to count you among my colleagues and friends. Another round of thanks goes to Dr Constantin Stefanou and my colleagues at the Institute for Advanced Legal Studies of the University of London for offering me the academic space to teach, reflect and cross fertilise my ideas. I am also greatly indebted to my colleagues at the Centre for European Constitutional Law, and especially Professor Dr Xenophon Contiades, for their cooperation and companionship for almost twenty years now. My work at the CECL exposed me to real legal problems around the world and has shaped not only my thinking but also my preference for pragmatic and effective solutions.

My family has always been a source of genuine love and support, no matter the circumstances. Mama, Baba, Lydia, Taki, Nikola, Louka my heart warms up when I think of you. Thank you for everything. My dear friends Tamara and Max and their lovely daughters, Zoe and Alia, generously offered not only their friendship but also the warmest London home ever. Tamara and Max, you are family to me. My close friends Alex, Venou, Dimi, Niki have been my safety net through the twists and turns of life that coincided with the writing of this book. Girls, I deeply cherish your friendship. A broader circle of friends helped me, each in their own way, achieve the discipline and focus required to respond to a complicated life of writing, travelling and working. I am indebted to you all.

Writing a book is a unique journey. Intense, overwhelming, consuming but extremely fulfilling. The thoughts of many people have been woven into the fabric of the end result and it has been my intention to acknowledge them as best as I could. Any errors and mistakes remain entirely my own.