Acknowledgements

It takes a long time to write a book. As such, both authors owe a debt of gratitude to their home universities, namely the University of Sheffield and ‘Alexandru Ioan Cuza’ University of Iaşi, for making the time available to do so. Without such support, this book would not have been possible. The authors are also grateful to the European Commission and European Platform Tackling Undeclared Work for enabling learning and exchanging information and ideas with social partners, enforcement bodies and academic experts in field of labour from across Europe. Although her contribution to the book was undertaken before starting her Marie Skłodowska-Curie fellowship, Ioana Alexandra Horodnic is also grateful to the financial support provided by the European Union’s Horizon 2020 research and innovation programme under Marie Skłodowska-Curie grant agreement No. 746358 which provided time and resources for skills development and enabled her to gain new ideas in the field of labour.

Besides this institutional support, there are numerous individuals who have freely given their time in helping us to formulate our ideas on the employment relationship in the grey zone between dependent employment and genuine self-employment. In this regard, and in alphabetical order, we would like to express our thanks to Dragoș Adăscăliței, Thomas Hastings, Jason Heyes, Adrian Horodnic, Kirsty Newsome and Jan Windebank. Our sincere apologies to anybody we have forgotten. As always, however, the usual disclaimers apply.